SOAS South Asian Texts

During the period of British colonial rule in India, members of the education services and others felt it to be a natural part of their duties to edit important works of South Asian literature, so as to make them accessible to English-speaking readers. The initiative represented by these nineteenth century editions, which are now difficult to obtain, has sadly long been allowed to lapse.

The present series of SOAS South Asian Texts represents an attempt to revive this tradition in such a way as to meet the rather different requirements and expectations of students of South Asian literature today. The series is designed for those who have a basic reading knowledge of the language, but require the assistance of explanatory material in English in approaching original literary texts.

All volumes in the series accordingly begin with an editorial introduction in English, followed by the text itself, which is accompanied by explanatory notes and a glossary. It has not been thought necessary to provide translations of modern prose, but older verse texts are accompanied by full English translations. Though these renderings are primarily designed to assist understanding of the original, and themselves make no claim to any literary merit, it is hoped that they and the editorial introductions may serve to introduce some of the classics of South Asian literature to those unable to read them in their original language.

Preface

In modern usage, the name 'Hindi' refers increasingly narrowly to the Kharī Bolī dialect which underlies Modern Standard Hindi (MSH) both in its spoken and its literary forms. Yet until about the middle of the nineteenth century, the literatures of the 'Hindi'speaking area were dominated by other dialects, principal of which were Braj Bhāșā and Avadhī. Braj Bhāṣā in particular gained a literary currency well beyond the borders of the area where it was (and is) spoken as a mother-tongue; the association of the cultural district of Braj, centred on the towns of Mathura and Vrindaban, with the Krṣna religion made it a natural choice as the vehicle for devotional verse, and its linguistic and literary conventions were enthusiastically adopted for a wider range of court and popular verse.

This book seeks to introduce some of the main genres and styles of Braj Bhāsā literature to readers already having a confident grasp of MSH. Though obviously falling far short of being fully representative, the choice of works excerpted here is intended to reflect a standard repertory of the classical, or pre-modern, tradition. Texts for which full and annotated translations are already published elsewhere (e.g. the major Braj Bhāṣā texts of Tulsidās and Nanddās) have not been included; and considerations of space have excluded other major figures such as Haridās, Keśav, and Ghanānand. The natural juxtapositioning of devotional poems with examples of a more worldly or even decadent taste has not been interrupted by any attempt to delineate literary 'eras' (kāl), since traditional designations such as bhakti kāl, rīti kāl disguise the natural heterogeneity of the literature under review. Several of the works reproduced here include some verses whose popular attribution to a particular author may rest on dubious - if time-honoured - assumptions about literary and religious history: this aspect of the texts, so typical a feature of Indian literary history, is discussed in the Introduction.

The Introduction has a practical emphasis, being intended to service an appreciation of the texts included in the reader rather than to attempt the kind of exhaustive coverage of Braj Bhāṣā grammar and literary history already available elsewhere. It falls into three main parts. The first, in which a familiarity with MSH (and such grammatical features as the formation of causative verbs) is assumed, is an outline grammar of Braj Bhāsaā, drawing heavily on the texts themselves for examples. The second introduces Hindi metrics, concentrating primarily (but not exclusively) on metres exemplified in this book. The third part attempts a survey history of the literature of the period, and gives brief introductions to the authors and the texts, with reference to other English-medium introductory materials; it concludes with a note of some textual conventions and dating systems. This section is followed by concordances to the published texts from which the extracts have been drawn, and by a select bibliography. While the scope of the Introduction has been defined by the contents of the texts themselves, it is hoped that it may also be found helpful in approaching parallel literatures such as the Avadhì verse of Tulsidās and the Sufi poets.

The first two texts are in prose (a rarity in pre-modern writing) and consequently offer a more accessible entrée into the literature than can be hoped for in the formalized and elliptical contexts of verse, where word order and syntax are often subjugated to the different requirements of literary rhetoric. The prose selections are not translated, but annotations at the foot of the page gloss any obscurities of lexis or phrasing; line numbers have been added for ease of reference, and are in Nagari to avoid confusion with the annotation references, which are marked by superscript footnote numbers in this 'prose' section. The remaining texts, all in verse, are arranged chronologically and follow a standard format: Braj Bhāṣā text on the left-hand page is faced by an English translation, and by annotations which refer to verse and line number (e.g. ' 12.4 ') such that they can be approached from either the original or the translation. It must be emphasized that the translations have been kept deliberately literal, as they are intended as a key to the meaning and, where possible, the syntax of the Braj verses: no attempt has been made to echo the poetic diction of the originals.

A brief Index of Epithets and Motifs lists the most common of the allusive titles, patronymics etc. which throng any traditional poem to the exasperation of the novice reader. Finally, a complete Glossary lists all the words in the texts; etymologies following the English definitions are based closely on CDIAL.

The Introduction is best used by reference from the texts themselves, and the first of the prose texts, $R \bar{a} j$-nitti, makes a more accessible starting-point than the necessarily dry paragraphs of Part I; Rāj-nitt is relatively straightforward linguistically, and its Aesop-like contexts require no background information. Once Rāj$j \bar{n} \bar{i} t i$ and the following Vārtā episodes have introduced the morphology of Braj Bhāsāa, the reader should confidently be able to begin on the verse texts, beginning perhaps with the $S \bar{u} r$-săgar. Readers looking for a limited sampling of verse types might usefully take verses from $\operatorname{Sūr}$-sāgar, SujānRaskhān and the Satsaī of Bihārilalal as a 'core' selection, light relief being always available in the Sabhă-bilās poems.

I am grateful to a number of colleagues who have commented on various parts of this book: the heaviest debt of gratitude is due to Professor J.C. Wright, whose scrupulous examination of the etymologies in the Glossary has provided much enlightenment and saved me from many an embarrassment. I am also grateful to Professor C. Shackle for numerous suggestions on the presentation of the material; to Mr S.C.R. Weightman for championing the cause of the Bhāsāābhūsan and for loans of numerous books; to Dr R.D Gupta for his discussion of textual problems; and to Mr Simon Digby for providing a photograph of a folio from a Raskhān manuscript in his collection.

The physical production of the book has been made possible by Apple Macintosh software devised by Dr K.E. Bryant of the University of British Columbia ('Jaipur' Devanagari font) and by Mr K.R. Norman of Cambridge University ('Norman' font for Roman transliteration with diacritical marks); I am grateful to the SOAS Research and Publications Committee for meeting the full costs of production, and to Martin Daly, Diana Matias, Alison Surry and Susan Madigan for their help in preparing the text for publication. Shortcomings in the book are, needless to say, all my own work.

The shared enthusiasms of those for whom the contents of this book are part of a living culture have been a great incentive in the preparation of the material. In particular, an unseen debt of gratitude is due to Mahesh Patel, to whom the book is consequently dedicated.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLIERATION

Textual references are transliterated with 'inherent' a. Elsewhere, 'inherent' a is shown only after conjuncts (as in bhakta), in Sanskrit titles, and in some short words to follow established usage (e.g. rasa). Unmarked transliteration has been used for well-known place names and historical characters. Certain letters such as $h$ and $s$ are used to transliterate both Sanskrit and Arabic/Persian phonemes, since no confusion is possible in context.

Braj Bhāṣā is a member of the group of languages and dialects descended from the western form of Prakrit called Sauraseni. In terms of the genealogical model on which Indo-Aryan languages are traditionally categorized, Braj Bhāsā occupies a place parallel with such neighbouring dialects as Kharī Bolī (KhB), Hariyānī, Kanaujī, etc., and also with such languages as Panjabi, Rajasthani, Gujarati, Marathi, and Bengali. These and other such languages constitute the 'New Indo-Aryan' (NIA) group; NIA languages, though individually distinct, share features of phonology and morphology which characterize them as parallel descendants of 'Middle Indo-Aryan' (MIA) languages, i.e. the Prakrits and various forms of Apabhramśa, which are themselves descended from Old Indo-Aryan (OIA), i.e. Vedic and the later forms of Sanskrit. This descent from OIA to NIA is typified by a gradual and progressive process of linguistic simplification, as is clearly seen in the example of grammatical inflexion, where the two main cases of Hindi (direct and oblique) are a distant echo of the fully inflecting syntax of Sanskrit with its eight distinct cases.

In terms of phonology and morphology also, NIA languages show a process of simplification wherein, for example, the often complex consonant clusters of Sanskrit are reduced to more readily pronounceable forms. Paradoxically, however, the new demands put on NIA languages by twentieth-century contexts of language use has led to an unprecedented reliance on borrowings from Sanskrit and on the coining of neologisms from the inexhaustible stocks of the Sanskrit lexicon. As a result of this process, which is particularly conspicuous in the 'standardized' modern forms of Hindi and Bengali, the true NIA quality of these vernaculars tends to be disguised by the high proportion of Sanskrit loanwords. In comparison with Modern Standard Hindi (MSH), then, the Braj Bhāṣā of the 'classical' period of Hindi literature exhibits in relatively chaste form the true vernacular phonology and lexicon of NIA.

Various sound changes characteristic of the NIA phonology of Braj are appropriately exemplified in the Krṣna epithet sẫvaro 'the dark one', a derivative of Sanskrit syāmala through MIA sāmala : the replacement of $\xi$ by $s$; the simplification of an initial conjunct to a single consonant; the replacement of a medial consonant by a semivowel, and the accompanying nasalization of the preceding long vowel; the replacement of original final $I$ by $r$; and a direct case m.sg. ending in $-\mathrm{o} /-\mathrm{au}$ (cf. MSH - $-\bar{a}$ ).
${ }^{1}$ Bibliographical Note. The development of Indo-Aryan is summarized in G.A. Zograph 1982 and with greater detail in J. Bloch 1965; J. Beamcs 1966 follows a comparative approach to NA grammar. For the wider Indo-European perspective see W.B. Lockwood 1969. H.S. Kcllogg 1938 is a grammar of the various Hindi dialects, and includes useful comparative tabulations of grammatical forms. C. Shackle and R. Snel 1990 analyse the component elements of Hindi-Urdu and trace the divergent development of the two languages since 1800. R.S. McGregor 1968, an analysis of a sixteenth-century prose text, is the standard Braj Bhāsā grammar; its categories have been uscfully applicd to a body of religious verse in M . Thiel-Horstmann 1983.

Broadly speaking, three levels of Indo-Aryan vocabulary appearing in Braj are to be distinguished: tatsama, i.e. unchanged Sanskrit words (e.g. puṣpa 'flower', patra 'leaf'); semitatsama or ardhatatsama, i.e. those loanwords from Sanskrit whose spelling has been superficially altered but which have not been subject to a full process of sound change (e.g. bhagata < bhakta 'votary', darasana < darsana 'seeing'); and tadbhava, i.e. vernacular words derived from OIA etymons via the MIA stage (e.g. sẫvaro < sāmala < syāmala; puhupa < puppha < puṣpa 'flower'; pāta < patta < pattra 'leaf'). As is seen here, the tatsama and tadbhava forms of some words may be synonymous (though often distinct in register); elsewhere, the tadbhava comprises an etymological doublet to the tatsama, e.g. bhã̃ti 'type, manner' versus its etymon bhakti 'devotion'. Depending on the nature of their constituent consonants, some tadbhavas will have little obvious similarity to their etymons, e.g. ahũtha < ardhacaturtha 'three and a half'; other words, having a simple tatsama form, will not change at all in their tadbhava stage, e.g. nīla 'blue', jāla 'net', bila 'mouse-hole', chala 'deceit'.

The tripartite scheme of tatsama, semi-tatsama and tadbhava accounts for the majority of words encountered in the texts included in the book; but loans from Persian and from Arabic (through Persian) are also commonplace, especially in those texts which are not self-consciously based on Sanskrit models. The widespread borrowings from European languages which are so prominent in the twentieth-century lexicon were still some way off in the period covered by our texts, which include only a single isolated example (SB tamākū 'tobacco', from the Portuguese). Finally, there is the smaller category of socalled desī words, i.e. those Indian words not deriving from Sanskrit but from ancient 'local' dialects (which may include those from pre-Aryan speech).

The processes of Indo-Aryan word derivation are demonstrated with great clarity by the comparative etymological dictionary CDIAL, whose presentation of the full range of NIA derivatives under their OIA etymon (as headword) allows sound changes to be observed in both their chronological and their geographical perspectives. The comparative approach of CDIAL also makes it possible for hypothetical etymons, marked with an asterisk, to be reconstructed on the basis of the evidence of MIA and NIA forms.

I. 1 PHONOLOGY AND ORTHOGRAPHY

This section outlines the most important characteristics of Braj morphology, often by comparison with MSH equivalents. Orthographic conventions in Braj are far from standardized. The forms which appear in published texts are the product of successive centuries of scribal copying and re-copying, and do not necessarily represent accurately the conventions in which a work was originally composed; forms preserved in manuscripts may represent genuine linguistic features, or may simply reflect scribal whim. Because of the diversity of texts included here (some of which, for example, include KhB forms), a complete analysis of all occurring grammatical forms is not practicable: major exceptions to the general outline given here (which follows closely the categories established by R.S. McGregor 1968 and M. Thiel-Hortsmann 1983) are noted in the annotations to the texts.

I.1.1 Vowels

(a) i may replace $a$ in a palatal environment, e.g. china (Skt kṣana).
(b) Short vowels may be arbitrarily lengthened for metre and/or rhyme, e.g. cārī for cāri.

(d) e and ai are often interchangeable, as e.g. $k e / k a i$ (MSH ke).
(e) $o$ and $a u$ are likewise interchangeable in final position, e.g. in m. perf. ptc. such as āyau/āyo (MSH āyā).
(f) Elision of an initial a- (following final -a in the previous word) may be shown by avagraha: dharama 'ru (धरम ऽरु, SS 30.2).
(g) Unstressed vowels may be subject to metathesis, e.g. lapaṭā- / lipaṭā-.

I.1.2 Consonants

(a) Arabic and Persian $\underline{k h}, z$ are usually assimilated to their Indo-Aryan counterparts and are not distinguished by the use of diacritical dots: thus ख्याल, हजार.
(b) Tatsama $k s$ yields tadbhava $k h$ (e.g. kṣaṇa > khana ); but $c h$ or $c c h$ also appears as a semitatsama for ks, e.g. china, kaṭāccha, chïra.
(c) $j \tilde{n}$ is usually represented by gy, e.g. gyāna.
(d) $\quad r, r t h$ are not consistently distinguished from $d, d h$.
(e) Original retroflex $n$ usually appears as $n$ : e.g. kärana.
(f) $y$ is usually represented by $j$ in stressed positions, e.g. jamunā; but $y$ is retained in pr., e.g. yaha. (In some manuscripts the graphs य़ and य represent $y$ and $j$ respectively.)
(g) Similarly $v$ is represented by $b$ in stressed positions, e.g. basana; but with $v$ retained in pr., e.g. vaha. Little consistency in $b / v$ appears in e.g. verbal nouns in -bau/-vau.
(h) $\quad l>r$ is a common sound change in a final syllable: $g a \bar{l} \overline{1}>g$ gārī, $d h \bar{u} l i>d h u \bar{u} r i$.
(i) Medial or final -aya- is often represented as-ai-, e.g. samai, udai; and -ava-becomes -au-, e.g. ūdhau.
(j) $s$ is largely replaced by $s$, e.g. syāma; it is maintained regularly only in the prestigious formula/title $\xi_{\Pi} \bar{i}$, with its distinctive grapheme (श्री).
(k) $s$ may be represented by $k h$, e.g. bhākhā, reflecting pronunciation. In manuscripts, [kh] may be written with the graph ष, e.g. षात 'eats'. (A convention in the published text of BhBh , wherein [kh] is written $\mathbb{\Psi}$, is not followed in the transcription in this book.)
(l) Aspirate consonants may be reduced to $h$, e.g. gahiro < gabhīra.

I.1.3 Conjuncts

(a) Consonant clusters are often resolved into their components, e.g. janma > janama.
(b) Simplification of a conjunct to a single consonant may be accompanied by a lengthening of a preceding short vowel, e.g. karma $>$ kāma, patra $>$ pāta.
(c) Conjuncts of $r$ with $y$, common in perf. ptc. from verb roots in $-r$, are written not with a superscript repha but with a modified य, appearing in the printed text as e.g. करयो.

I.1.4 Nasality

(a) Many manuscripts and printed texts make no use of candrabindu, and so do not distinguish vowel nasality from homorganic nasals. Usage in this book follows the source texts as printed, without attempting any standardization on metrical or phonetic grounds.
(b) Nasalization of a vowel before or after a nasal consonant, or occurring spontaneously in a long vowel, is commonly shown in manuscripts (e.g. करनां, स्यांम, पांइ), but this convention is not usually carried through into printed texts.
(c) Nasalization of verb endings is largely random, and does not usually distinguish pl. from sg. with any consistency. Similarly, nasality in the final vowels of nouns, adj., etc. has little consistent morphological value; though adverbs in $-e /-a i$ are often nasalized (e.g. pahalẽ̃, āgaĩ).

I.1.5 Sanskritization

The authentic vernacular quality of Braj phonology tends to become disguised by the imposition of Sanskritic orthographies (though the process is not nearly as advanced as it is in MSH); this tendency is found in manuscript copyists and modern editors/typesetters alike. Thus many of the tatsama forms found in the texts may represent Sanskritizations of semi-tatsamas or tadbhavas.

I. 2 NOUNS

(a) Nouns with -a stems may show $-u$, normally in the direct case: e.g. amjanu. This remnant of the fuller inflexional system of the older language is common in the orthography of BS (as appearing in the edition used here), more random elsewhere.
(b) Alongside m. nouns in $-\bar{a}$ (which may retain $-\bar{a}$ in obl.) are some in $-a u$ (or $-o$ ): e.g. pahũcau 'wrist', mātho 'head'.
(c) Obl.pl. nouns take the suffix $-n a,-n u$ or $-n i(=$ MSH $-\tilde{o})$. No consistent distinction is usually apparent between the three forms of the suffix. As in MSH, $-\overline{1}$ and - $\bar{u}$ stems are usually shortened before the suffix: dinani, bhã̃tina, sakhinu.
(d) Obl.sg. nouns may take the suffix -hi $/$ hī (often nasalized): manahi cori 'stealing the mind' (SS 30.2); jasodā syämahĩ kaṃṭha lagāyau 'Yaśodā embraced Syām' (SS 25.6).
(e) Used nominally, badau (MSH barä) has the obl.pl. badena (/-ni /-nu ).
(f) Various case functions are carried by obl. without ppn., reflecting the fact that the language has yet to develop a fully analytic syntax (where case relationships are indicated through the use of ppn., as in MSH).
(g) Verbal nouns: see I.5.11.

I. 3 ADIECTIVES

(a) -au/-o endings are the equivalent to MSH -ā: bahirau, chabīlau, sūno.
(b) Both -ai and -e appear as m. obl. endings; they may be nasalized, though nasality often indicates adverbial use: see 1.6.1.
(c) Ptc. adj. in -ita are frequently borrowed from Sanskrit: Sobhita, racita, ānandita.
(d) Pronominal adj. (merau etc.) are included in the following section.

I. 4 PRONOUNS

The following is a summary of occurring forms, and does not list all variants: the texts show much orthographic variation, particularly in respect of vowel length, of e/ai and o/au vowel values, and of nasality. Many forms here listed as s . also appear as pl.

I. 5 VERBS

I.5.1 Root, Theme, and Stem

The composition of verb forms is described on the basis of the following tables:
Roots ending in a consonant:

| ROOT | THEME |  |  |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- |
| bol- | $-i,-a$ | STEM: | boli, bola |
| bol- | $-a-$ | ACTIVE STEM: | bola- |
| bol- | - iya- | PASSIVE STEM: | bolĬya-, bolІ̆ja- |

Roots ending in a vowel:

| ROOT | THEME |  |  |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- |
| $\bar{a}$ | $-i,-y a$ | STEM: | $\bar{a} i, \vec{a} y a$ |
| $\bar{a}$ | zero, -va- | ACTIVE STEM: | $\bar{a}-$, āva- |
| $\bar{a}$ | - iya- | PASSIVE STEM: | $\bar{a} i y a-$ |

Note the following points:
(a) The stem form of the verb ho- is hvai in many contexts.
(b) Final -ā of a root may coalesce with thematic $-i$, forming stems in ai-: root khāa > stem khai-, etc.
(c) Braj retains many verb stems which have been replaced by phrase verbs in KhB : Braj pūj-, bhaj-, baran- vs. KhB pūrā karnā, bhajan karnā, varṇan karnā respectively.

I.5.2 The Substantive Verb, ho-

Used both independently and as auxiliary with ptc., the following forms are found:

|  | Present |  | Imperfective |  | Past (MSH thā etc.) |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- |
|  | $\underline{\text { Sg. }}$ | Pl. | $\underline{\text { Sg. }}$ | Pl. |  |
| 1st | हों | है, हैं | हतt, हती | हते, हती |  |
| 2nd | हो | हो, |  |  |  |
| 3rd | है, हौ, आाहि | है, हैं | हतt, हो, हती | हते, हती |  |

[^1]
I.5.3 General Present, and Past Imperfective

The imperf. ptc. is formed from active stem $+-t a$, $-t i$ (e.g. kahata, kahati). The weak $f$. ending $-t i$ is often replaced by $-t a ;-t u$ (kahatu) sometimes appears with $m$. subjects; -til/-te also occur, especially when for metre or rhyme and/or through MSH influence.
Past and present tenses may be distinguished by the auxiliary (present hai, etc., past hatau, etc.), though in verse this is usually absent. The general present covers the functions of the MSH present imperf. and continuous, including use as a historic present.

कछुक खात कछु धरनि गिरावत 'some he eats, some he throws to the floor' (SS 14.2)
घरही घर डोलतु 'he roams from house to house' (SS 23.4)
जानत हौ दुख सुख सब जन के 'you know the sorrows and joys of all' (SS 9.2)
देखत हीं गोरस मैं चींटी 'I see there's an ant in the milk' (SS 17.6).
मनहीं मन बलबीर कहत हैं 'Balbīr says to himself' (SS 11.5)
दो वैष्णव आपस में बतरात हुते 'two Vaiṣnavas were talking together' (VV 174)

I.5.4 Subjunctive-present

| 1st | root $+-a \tilde{u} /-\tilde{o} /-\tilde{u} /-\tilde{u}$ |
| :--- | :--- |
| 2nd | root $+-e$ |
| 3rd | root $+-a i,-e,-i$ (sometimes written $-y a$, e.g. hoya $=h o i$ ) |

Nasality of the 3rd person ending does not consistently indicate plurality. The 3rd person $-i$ ending is most commonly found in verbs with $-\bar{a}$ root; it is sometimes hardly to be distinguished from the stem used as abs., e.g. in BS 3 māri /dāari, and is particularly common in such rhyme-words requiring the metrical pattern $/-\cdots /$
Usage of the subjunctive-present is often indistinguishable from that of the general present, although subjunctive force is sometimes to be understood from context. The subjunctive-present is often preferred, however, when the force of the verb is rhetorical or declamatory rather than narrative: compare the examples below with the narrative contexts of those in section I.5.3.

बंदों तिहिं पाइ 'I bow to those feet' (SS 1.4)
मैं उनकों कैसे जानों 'how might I know him?' (VV 187)
जो पशु हौं तौं...चरौं 'if I am an animal, then...may I graze' (SR 1.2)
समुझै नहिं कोइ 'no-one understands/can understand' (BS 11.1)
को कहि सकै बड़ेनु सों 'who could speak to the great?' (BS 41.1)

1.5.5 Perfective

The perf. ptc. is formed from root $+-a u /-o,-e(m),.-\bar{i}(f$.$) : hutau, kiyo, chẫre, gaī; -\bar{a}$ sometimes occurs, through MSH influence. The addition of $-y$ - to the root before a m.sg. ending is regular in - $\bar{a}$ roots, and also occurs in some consonant roots: $\bar{a} y a u$, kahyau, jänyau. The endings of f.pl. ptc. are not regularly nasalized. Note the following ptc.:

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { हो- भयौ (= MSH हुआ ) } \\
& \text { कर- कीनौ, कीन, कीन्हौ, करयौ, कियौ, कियो } \\ & \text { जा- गयौ } \\
& \text { दे- दीनौ } \\
& \text { ले- लियौ, लीन्ह(†) }
\end{aligned}
$$

As in MSH, an agentive construction applies with most transitive verbs in perf. tenses; the ppn. ne, however, is not an essential component in this construction, nouns and pr. which in MSH would take ne being simply in the agentive case. In the first person, max̃ is the agentive pr., haũ the nominative (though max̃ is nominative also in the later language, as in MSH). Some intransitive verbs with -a stems have $-n$ - added before the perfective ptc. termination, particularly in rhyme contexts: thus lajāne, samān̄̄, etc.

मैं नहिं माखन खायौ 'I didn't eat the butter' (SS 25.1)
मैं जान्यौ यह मेरौ घर है 'I thought this was my house' (SS 17.5)
जसोदा ऊखल बाँधे स्याम 'Yasoda tied Syām to the mortar' (SS 26.1)
रूप सों दीनी चिनौती अनंगहिं 'with your beauty you gave a challenge to Anañga' (SR 15.1)
रावन हरन सिया कौ कीन्हौ 'Rāvaṇ perfomed the abduction of Sītà' (SS 13.7)
भई ब्याकुल...कुमारि 'the girls...became disturbed' (SS 28.3)
जब जानति आधी.न भए हैं 'when she knows he has become dependent' (SS 31.5)

Verbs of 'saying', 'thinking', etc. may show concord with f. bāta as implicit direct object:
देसाधिपति नें सूरदास सों कही 'the emperor said to Sūrdās' (VV 23)
मन में बिचारी 'he thought to himself' (VV 206)
देसाधिपति के मन में आई 'it occurred to the emperor' (VV 6).

Some transitive verbs in VV are in concord with clause subject (though the ptc. may be read as a present-subjunctive, used as historic present, in some contexts - see VV 79):

तब वा गोपाल सों सूरदासजी कहे 'then Sūrdās said to that Gopāl' (VV 60)
कृष्णदास अपने मन में विचारे 'Kṛṣnadās thought to himself' (VV 145)

I.5.6 Participial Constructions

Non-finite participial constructions using the imperf. ptc. -ta are the equivalents of MSH constructions with invariable -te ptc.; less common are those those in which the ptc. shows adj. agreement with the noun it governs, as bürato in the last example below.

टेरत हेरत हारि परयौ 'calling and searching I suffered defeat' (SR 5.3)
मरत जियो 'on the point of dying, I lived' (RAM 56)
सोवत लरिकनि छिराकि मही सौं हँसत चलै 'having sprinkled the sleeping boys with earth, he went off laughing' (SS 22.4)
कहत न बनै सकुच की बातैं 'my anxieties could not be expressed' (SS 20.6)
दु:ख कछु टरत न टारे 'his grief cannot be removed, despite trying' (SB 8.5)
तब फिरत फिरत एक दिन गोवर्द्धन पर्वत पैं यह चढयो 'then wandering about, one day he ascended Govardhan hill' (VV 202)
यह वेणुनाद सुनत ही 'immediately on hearing this flute-playing' (VV 219)
नगर के निवासी...वाकौ शब्द सदा सुन्यो करें 'the townsfolk always hear its sound' (RN 18) तीन दिन कौ भूखौ बैठो है 'he has been sitting [there] hungry for three days' (VV 227) बूड़तो गजराज राख्यौ 'you saved the drowning elephant' (MP 3.5)

Non-finite constructions with the obl.sg. perf. ptc. in -e are, as in MSH, mostly adv.:
और भजे तैं काम सरै नहिं 'through other worshipping, one's aim is not achieved' (SS 2.2.) वाकौ बंधे बहुत दिन बीते 'many days passed by with him tied up' (RAM 27)
तीनि दिन याकों भूखे होइ गए है 'three days have passed with him being hungry' (VV 215) तेरे कहे 'on your say-so' (SR 3.3)

The m.sg. perf. ptc. combines with cāh- to give the sense 'to want to $X$ ', a usage largely replaced in MSH by dir. infinitive + cāhnā. Thus bhayau cāhata (cf. MSH honā cāhtā).

I.5.7 Future

I.5.7a - $\boldsymbol{h}$ - forms.

Sg. and pl. (nasality does not consistently designate pl. number) 1st stem +-haũ
2nd stem $+-h u$
3rd stem + -hai
मोर पखा सिर ऊपर राखिहौं 'I shall place a peacock-feather [crown] on my head' (SR 3.1) जैसैसै राबहु तैसैं रहौं 'as you shall maintain me so I remain' (SS 9.1)

भूषन भार सँभारिहै क्यों 'how will she bear the burden of her ornaments?' (BS 28.1)
हैंहैं फेरि बसंत क्तु 'there will be the spring season once more' (BS 42.2)
(In some published texts the 3rd person -hai ending is sometimes printed separately from the verb stem, through confusion with auxiliary hai.)
1.5.7b Subjunctive-future. Hardly to be distinguished from subjunctive-present (I.5.4) in usage. Formed from active stem $+-h i,-h \bar{i},-h \tilde{i},-h \tilde{i}$ (though nasality does not consistently indicate pl. number). The examples are 3rd person:

बेस्या बरस घटावही 'the whore will reduce her years' (NS 24.2)
(दृग) सर से जाहिं '(the eyes) go like arrows' (SR 23.2)
धात तन लावहीं 'he smears pigment on his body' (AP 16.1)
I.5.7c Extended -g-forms. Equivalent to MSH future forms (karũgā etc.), these comprise present subjunctive $+-g a u, g \bar{i},-g e$ (again with sporadic nasality):

गुंज की माल गरें पहिरौंगी 'I shall wear a necklace of seeds around my neck' (SR 3.1)
अब हम कहा करेंगे 'now what shall we do?' (VV 160)

I.5.8 Passives

I.5.8a Synthetic passive A general present tense in the passive is formed from passive stem + the imperf. ptc. endings $-t a,-t i$ (e.g. suniyata, boliyata), with or without auxiliary. Stems in -āi , such as pāi-, may be contracted to pai- etc.

अब हीं चलाइयति...चलन की बात 'is talk of going already set in motion?' (BS 15.2) ओढ़ियत है कि बिछेयत है 'is it worn, or spread over one?' (SS 39.2) दलमलियतु...कुसुम सौ गातु 'her flower-like body is crushed' (BS 69.1) मन्दिर में सामग्री चहियत हती 'provisions were needed in the temple' (VV 102)

A subjunctive-present tense in the passive is formed from passive stem + -i. (MSH cāhie 'is wanted' is a survival of such a form.) As with the active subjunctive-present, mood is often inexplicit, indicative or subjunctive senses applying equally well. This tense may also be indistinguishable from an imperative (cf. MSH 'āp' imperatives in -ie).

पत्रा हीं तिथि पाइयै 'only with an almanac is the date found' (BS 9.1)
क्यौं बसियै क्यौं निबहियै 'how can one dwell, how can one survive?' (BS 37.1)
बात प्रेम की राखिए अपने ही मन माँहि 'matters of love are kept within one's own heart' [= 'keep matters of love...'] (NS 16.1)
I.5.8b Periphrastic passive (with $j \bar{a}-$ ) The periphrastic or analytic passive formed from perf. ptc. $+j \bar{a}-\quad$ is equivalent to the MSH passive; in the negative it often. expresses incapacity or unwillingness to do something.

भूषन पिछाने जात 'her ornaments are distinguished' (BS 30.2)
जात तहिं उलँघी '[the threshold] cannot be crossed' (SS 11.3)
बोल्यौ न जाय 'he could not speak' (VV 65)

1.5.9 Absolutives

The commonest form is the verb stem alone:
ओढ़ि पितंबर लै लकुटी 'donning his sash and taking his stick' (SR 3.2)
कुच गिरि चढ़ि अति थकित ह्व 'climbing her breast-mountains, being most tired' (BS 5.1)
गाय गाय हरि के गुन 'constantly singing of Hari's qualities' (MP 4.4)
Alongside this is the extended form with -kari, or -kail-ke (which may be nasalized):
सूरदास महाप्रसाद लैकै आये 'Sūrdās arrived after taking mahāprasād' (VV 69)
तब ऐसे कहि कै खडग उठाय लियो 'then so saying he drew his sword' (VV 182)

I.5.10 Imperatives

The verb stem is frequently an imperative: suni, dekhi, etc
An imperative-subjunctive is formed from stem $+-h u,-h i,-u,-o /-a u$, these endings often being nasalized. $-y$ - may be suffixed to the stem before $-o$ or $-a u$.
Forms in -ie often operate as imperatives, as in MSH, though their original passive force is also often apparent.

सुनि सुत 'listen, son' (SS 13.1)
तु मिश्री...ले आउ 'bring...the sugar-candy' (VV 115)
हरि तुम हरो जन की पीर 'Hari, you remove people's pain' (MP 3.1)
करौ कुबत जगु 'though the world speak ill' (BS 66.1)
जसैं राखहु 'as you may maintain [me]' (SS 9.1)
इनकों मन्दिर में ले आइयो 'take him into the temple' (VV 246)
सुतहिं बरजो नँदरानी 'restrain your son, Yaśodā' (SS 24.8)
सुनहु न बचन 'listen to my words, won't you?’ (SS 23.7)

I.5.11 Verbal Nouns and Infinitives

Forms with functions equivalent to MSH infinitives in -nā (karnāetc.) are as follows:
(a) stem + -bau/-vau: forms a m. noun which inflects to $-e$ in obl.
(b) active stem + -na. used in composition with de- ('to allow to'), with pā- ('to manage to, be able to'), and with lāg- ('to begin to'); and with a following finite verb in purpose expressions. An extended form in -nau (cf. MSH -nā ) is also found.
(c) active stem $+-n i$ : forms a f. noun.

गढ़ लैबे की घात 'the stratagem for taking a fort' (NS 11.1)
कन दैबौ सौंप्यौ ससुर 'father-in-law entrusted alms-giving' (BS 23.1)
वह मोकों पकरन कों आयो 'he came to catch me' (VV 227)
मोकों स्पर्स करिवे कों दोरयो 'he ran to touch me' (VV 230)
बास छुड़ावन काज 'with the purpose of removing [her] clothes' (BS 48.1)
वा वेस्या की माता रोवन लागी 'that prostitute's mother began to cry' (VV 160)
तन की तपनि 'the burning of her body' (BS 71.1)
भॄकुटि मटकनि 'the dancing of her brow' (BS 24.1)
The m. perf. ptc. can be used nominally, as in MSH:
पावैगौ पुनि कियौ आपनौ 'you will reap later your own deeds' (SS 36.5)
मारचौ फिरि फिरि मारियै 'the stricken one is struck time and again' (BS 29.2)
पिय के बिछुरे 'in the lover's absence' (AY 2.1)

Forms in -ana such as bināsana, prakāsana, originally adj. ('destroying, illuminating'), function most commonly as verbal agent - thus 'destroyer, illuminator' etc. Several examples appear in RB and elsewhere. While most are Sanskrit loans, some are based on Braj verb stems, and are hardly to be distinguished from Braj verbal nouns.

I. 6 ADVERBS

1.6.1 For the most part, adverbs resemble their MSH equivalents. Those having invariable obl. endings (MSH -e) are often nasalized: kaisaĩ, pāchaĩ, āgaĩ, aba kaĩ, pahalẽ.
1.6.2 Among the negatives, equivalents for MSH nahif appear variously, as required by metre: nahî̃, nāhĩ, nāhĩna etc. Note the 1st person use of mati (MSH mat) in the sense 'lest' (e.g. BS 20.2). The prohibitive particle is often jini, jina (not found in MSH).
1.6.3 The emph. enclitics of the groups $\bar{i}, h i, h \overline{1}$ and $\breve{u}, h u, h \bar{u}$ (often nasalized) are equivalents to MSH $h \bar{i}$ and $b h \bar{i}$ respectively. They often coalesce with a preceding final vowel. Final $-\bar{i}+$ emph. $h \bar{i}$ may yield $-i$ iyai; final $-\bar{i}+$ emph. $h \bar{u}$ may yield -iyau. Examples:

| UNMARKED | EMPHATIC | UNMARKED | EMPHATIC |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- |
| सब | सबै | अज, आज | अजौं |
| वह | वहै | नैंक | नैंकौ |
| इत | इतै | तो, तौ | तऊ |
| पून्यौ | पून्यौई | दूरि | दूरयौ |
| नाव | नावै | बड़ी | बड़ीयौ |
| भली | भालियै | कब | कबौं |
| परी | परियै | कै | कैयौ |
| कछु, कछू | कछुव | दहि | दह्यौ |

I. 7 POSTPOSITIONS

Ppn. operate as in MSH, though it must be remembered that obl. case alone often has greater syntactic function than it can in MSH: see I.2(f). Note that binā and sahita also function as prepositions. Some ppn. - mostly those based on nouns - may appear with preceding kaî/ke, $k \bar{u}$.

अंतर 'within'
ऊपर 'above, on, for'
ओर 'towards, in the direction of'
करि 'by, with respect to', (often to be interpreted as the abs. from $k a r$-) (के) काज 'for, for the sake of'
(क) कारन 'for, for the sake of'
कौं, 芜 object marker, cf. MSH ko
कौ, की, के poss. part., cf. MSH kā etc.
(के) ढिक, ढिग 'near, with', cf. MSH pās तरे, तरै 'beneath, under'

ताई 'to, up to, until'
तैं, ते, तें, ते 'by, with, from, since'
(की) नाई 'like, in the manner of'
(के) निमित 'for the purpose of'
ने ppn. of agentive case
पर, पै 'to, towards, at, from,' (के) पाछ
पै 'to, for, by, from'
बिना, बिनि, बिनु 'without, but for'
बिषे 'in, within'
बीच, बिन्च 'in, between'

I. 8 SUMMARY OF THE BRAJ VERB

Only the most common forms are listed. Finite examples are 3rd-person s.; main examples are based on धर- vt. 'hold, place'. Further examples requiring special note are in square brackets.

| Stem | धरि, धर | [के, ह्वे, खै, दै, लै; आय = आइ ] |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Imperfective ptc. | धरत (f. धरति) | [आवत etc. show medial व] |
| Perfective ptc. | धरयौ (f. धरी) | [ भयौ (f. भई ), करयौ etc., दीनो] |
| General present | धरत (f. धरति), | धरत है, धरत हतौ |
| Subj.-present | धरे/धरे |  |
| Future | धरिहै | धरैगौ |
| Passive | धरियै | धरियत धरयौ जात |
| Absolutive | धरि | धरिक, धरि करि |
| Imperative | धरि / धर | धरिहि, धरिहु धरो |
| Infinitive | धरिबौ (obl. धरिबे) | धरन / धरनि |

II PROSODY

II. 1 BASIC ELEMENTS

Hindi metres derive from those of Sanskrit, Prakrit and Apabhramśa, and are described according to the Sanskrit terminology. Metre is not based on stress accent as in English verse, but on the intrinsic length of the syllables which make up the line. Long syllables are called guru, 'heavy' (hereafter ' $G$ '), and short syllables are called laghu, 'light' ('L') The basic units of measurement are the mātrā or 'metrical instant' and the varna or 'syllable'. All syllables, including final -a (as in kāma) are counted in scanning a line.

The rules governing quantity can be summarized as follows:
1 Short vowels are of one mātrā: अ इ उ उ
2 Long vowels are of two mātrās: आ ई ऊ ए ऐ ओ औ

3 A short vowel becomes long 'by position' when followed in the same word by a conjunct consonant, by anusvār, or by visarga

| भक्त | पल्लव | नंद $[=$ नन्द $]$ | अंग $[=$ अङ゙ $]$ |
| :--- | :---: | :---: | :---: |$\quad$ दु:ख

Rule 3 does not usually apply in the following circumstances:
(a) if the second member of a conjunct is the semivowel य;
(b) before the conjunct न्ह or म्ह;
(c) when anusvār stands for candrabindu, representing vowel nasality rather than a nasal consonant.
कह्यो
कन्हैया
हंसत [= हँसत]

Note the following exceptions which may apply if the metre requires it:
(a) ए, ऐ, ओ and औ may be counted as short, especially in unstressed positions;
(b) The diphthongs ऐ and औं may be dissolved into their two component short vowels (see note to BS 29.2);
(c) a nasal consonant in a conjunct may be reduced to vowel nasality, allowing e.g. अंग to be read as ऊँग (two short syllables).

In some metres, long and short syllables combine to form feet called ganas, of which tie most important are listed here with their Indian and Greek names:

| $\ldots-$ | $G G$ | spondee |
| :--- | :--- | :--- |
| $\ldots$ | $G$ | trochee |
| $\cdots$ | $L G$ | iambus |
| $\cdots$ | na－gana | tribrach |
| $\ldots \sim$ | bha－gana | dactyl |
| $\cdots-u$ | ja－gana | amphibrach |
| $\ldots-$ | ra－gana | cretic |
| $\cdots-$ | sa－gana | anapaest |

A poetic line（dala or pankti）is typically divided into two or more sections（pāda）whose internal arrangement may be in feet（caran）comprising the various ganas．Päda－boundaries will usually coincide with word－breaks，but caran－boundaries need not do so．Adjacent pādas may be separated by a caesura（yati）．Odd and even lines are followed by single and double dandas respectively；and verses are numbered at the end by numerals between double dandas，e．g．$\|$ Iz $\|$ ．Further features of the line are described in $\Pi .2$ below．

II． 2 MĀTRIK METRES

Metres of this category are measured by the number of mātrās to the line．In many mātrik metres，the arrangement of long and short syllables within the line or the pāda is not fixed， so that a line defined as＇ $16+12$ mātrās＇may have any arrangement of syllables yielding the appropriate total of mātrās．In metres where the mātrās do fall into groups or＇mätrik ganas＇（as in II．2．1），the internal composition of these is typically not specified；thus a mātrik gaṇa of six mātrās may comprise／u－v－／，／uvuvv／，／－－－／，／uv－uv／，etc．

II．2．1 Dohā

This is the most common couplet metre，ubiquitous throughout early Hindi poetry．Each of the two lines consists of 24 mātrās in the arrangement $6+4+3,6+4+1$（the comma indicates a caesura，shown in the scansion below by a double oblique line）．The＇odd＇ pādas，i．e．the first and third quarters of the couplet，should not begin with an amphibrach （ja－gana，v－v）or end with a trochee $(G L,-v)$ ．The rhyme is in a trochee $(G L,-v)$ ．

\begin{aligned}
& \text { इ- }-\cdots / ~ \\
& \text { इहीं आस अटक्यौ रहतु अलि गुलाब कै मूल । } \\
& \text { हैंहैं फेरि बसंत कतु इन डारनु वे फूल । }
\end{aligned}

In a dohā，the four quarters（ $p \bar{a} d a$ ）very commonly comprise discrete clauses：thus the caesura，though not necessarily shown graphically，elucidates the syntax of the line． Some modern editions show the caesura with a comma，a practice which has been followed，where appropriate，in this book．

II．2．2 Sorṭhā

This is an inverted dohā ：that is，in each line the two pādas are transposed，leaving the rhyme in the middle of the line，and a mätrā construction of $6+4+1,6+4+3$ ．

\begin{aligned}
& -\quad-/--/ / / \sim--/ / \sim-/ \sim u \\
& \text { में लखि नारी ज्ञानु करि राख्यौ निरधारु यह । } \\
& \text { बहई रोग निदानु वह बैदु औषधि वहै ।। }
\end{aligned}

II．2．3 Barvai（Barvā，Barvau）

A compact couplet of $12+7$ mātrās $(6+4+2,4+2+1)$ to the line，rhyming like the dohā．

（Note how the nasal in the initial unstressed syllable of nãdanandana（＝nandanandana）is here reduced to vowel nasality，such that the syllable is metrically short．）

I．2．4 Arill

This is usually defined as a 16－mātrā metre；but as used by Nāgarīās in the Arill－pacīsī the name is applied to a quatrain with a line length of 21 mātrās（ $11+10$ or $12+9$ ），rhyming in couplets（a metre elsewhere called Cāndräyañ）．

\begin{aligned}
& \text { टोकत गैल गुपाल दान मिस लैं छरी । } \\
& \text { いいい い い - - - } / /- \text { い - - - } \\
& \text { गहबर बन अँधियार हार तिय हैं करी ॥ } \\
& \text { - - - い い い / / い い - - - } \\
& \text { नैन बैन तन उरझन मन उरझाइयैं । } \\
& \text { い -u い - - // い い い - - - - } \\
& \text { ब्रजनागर नँदलाल सु निस दिन गाइयें ॥ }
\end{aligned}

II．2．5 Caupāī and Caupaī

Each of the four pädas is effectively a self－contained line of 16 mātrās．The constructioı، is often $6+4+4+2$ māträs，rhyme is AAAA or AABB．Rhyme is usually -- ，sometimes $-\cdots$ ．

Though the name Caupā̄̄ clearly defines a quatrain stanza, the couplet (dvipad $\overline{1}$ ), rather than the quatrain, is often taken as the basic unit for the purposes of verse numbering.

\begin{aligned}
& \text { _ - -u u- - - // - - - - - u - - } \\
& \text { आयो एक बड़ी व्यौपारी । लादें नाव सौंज बहु भारी ॥ }
\end{aligned}

Couplets of caupā̄̄ may alternate with a 15 -mātrā variant, caupā̄, ending $-\cup$ or $\sim$-.

II.2.6 Mukrī (Mukrī, Kah-mukrī)

The Mukrī is a riddle cast in a quatrain. In the first three lines the heroine seems to speak of her lover, but in the final line denies it (mukar- means 'to deny, to go back on one's word'), predicating her descriptions to some innocent subject. The length of that subject word, which provides the final rhyme in the $A A B B$ rhyme-scheme, will determine the metrical length of the second couplet. Most examples seem to conform roughly to a pattern of 16 or 15 mätrãs to the line; none conform strictly to the definition given in Platts (1930:1059) and elsewhere, according to which each line consists of four trochees, though the lines can often be read with a trochaic stress.

\begin{array}{llllll}
\text { लंबी लंबी डगों जु आवै । } \\
\text { लंब } \\
\text { सारे दिन की हौस बुझावै ।। } \\
\text { उठके चला तो पकड़ा खूंट । } \\
\text { क्यौं सखि सज्जन ना सखी ऊंट ।। } \end{array}

II.2.7 Kuñdaliyā

A composite metre, consisting of a dohā followed by one rolā quatrain (of $11+13$ mātrās to the line). The first pāda of the rolā is a repeat of the last pāda of the dohā, and the last word of the whole stanza returns to the word or phrase with which it started: thus the stanza resembles a coiled serpent (kunḍalī).

```

```
    कह गिरधर कविराय दु:ख कछु टरत न टारे ।
    खटकत है जिय माहिं कियौ जो बिना बिचारै

II.2.8 Chappay

Another composite metre, consisting of a rolā quatrain (of $11+13$ mātrās to the line) plus an ullāl couplet. The ullāl has $15+13$ mātrās to the line, sometimes reckoned as $4+4+4+3$ $6+4+3$; a variant has $13+13$ mātrās, as in the example here from the Bhakta-māl of Nābhādās (Nābhājī n.d.:290):

II. 3 MATRIK METRES USED IN PADAS

A pada is a lyric hymn, performed in one of the many rhythmic cycles (tāla) of Indian music. Though metres such as Caupāī may be used in padas, the metres described below are more commonly encountered: they do not really constitute a metrical type distinct from II.2, but are here separately categorized for convenience. The mātrik metres used in padas are of a simple construction, usually being defined only in terms of the overall line length and the position of a single caesura. A pada may consist of any number of couplets, a typical length being three or four (i.e. six or eight lines). Occasionally an odd number of lines is encountered, especially in Mīrā's poems, which generally follow the metrical rules' only very loosely; but generally the couplet construction holds good. (The convention of marking odd and even lines with single and double dandas respectively has necessarily been dropped in the Mīrā poems in this book.)

The rhyme scheme is AABBCC etc., or simply AAAAAA etc. The first line, as in the example below, is often short, and acts as a refrain, called teka or sthāy $\bar{i}$ (though these terms may also be applied to the whole of the first couplet): its length usually approximates to the length of the first pāda of a full line, i.e. 16 mātrās in the case of $S \bar{a} r$.

ח.3.1 Sār

This has $16+12$ mātrās to the line (often arranged as $6+4+4+4+4+4+2$ ), with rhyme in $G G$ $(--)$ or less commonly in a bha-gana ( $-\cup v$ )

निसि दिन बरषत नैन हमारे।

The $16-m a \bar{t}$ trā base of this metre is typical of many pada metres, and corresponds to the use in sung performance of the commonest tāla, the 16 -beat tīntāl. The following example shows how the first couplet of a pada might be set to the tāla cycle: note that the poetic line often begins at some medial point in the cycle (āvarta), typically allowing a long syllable to fall on beat 1 , the so-called sama, which bears the strongest stress. In the second line of the traditional transcription given below, the sama is marked ' $x$ ', subsidiary strong beats or tā̄̄̄s are marked numerically ' 2 ' and ' 3 ', and the de-stressed or 'empty' beat khālī, at the beginning of the third section, is shown with a zero. (It is the three tālīs — often marked by hand-claps, or by the jhẫjh cymbals - which give tīntāl its name.)

Tūntāl:

The first four mātrās of the teka are here used as a makeweight, shown in italics, to fill the discrepancy between the 12-mätrā teka line and the 16-beat cycle. (See R.Snell 1983.)

II.3.2 Sarasī

Identical to $S \bar{a} r$ but with final syllable short: $16+11$ mātrās with trochee rhyme ( $G L,-v$ ) (In this and following examples, couplets exemplify the metre of whole stanzas.)

\begin{aligned}
& \text { कोटिक कला काछि दिखराई जल थल सुध नहिं काल । } \\
& \text { सूरदास की सबै अबिद्या दूरि करौ नँदलाल ।। }
\end{aligned}
$$

Sarasī and Sār are often mixed within the same stanza: SS 15, for example, starts with a $S a \bar{r}$ couplet, and continues with two couplets in Sarasī.

ח.3.3 Samān savaiyā

$16+16$ mātrās to the line, as in the first couplet of SS 32, whose teka has 16 mātrăs, i.e half the length of the full line:

नटवर वेष धरे बज आवत

मोर मुकुट मकराकृत कुंडल कुटिल अलक मुख पर छबि पावत ॥

II.3.4 Bīr

16+15 mätrās to the line.
कैसी टेव परी इन गोपिनि उरहन कैं मिस आवतिं प्रात ।

II.3.5 Karkhā

$20+17$ mātrās to the line (perhaps $8+12,8+9$ ):

\begin{aligned}
& \text { अनुभवी जानही बिना अनुभव कहा प्रिया जाकौ नहीं चित्त चोरै। } \\
& \text { प्रेम के सिंधु कौ मर्म जान्यौ नहीं सूर कहि कहा भयौ देह बोरें ।। }
\end{aligned}

II.3.6 Sañkar

16+10 mātrās to the line.
कमल नयन घनस्याम मनोहर अनुचर भयौ रहौं ।

II.3.7 Rūp-mālā

$14+10$ mätrās to the line (and accordingly sung to 14 - or 7 -beat tāla ).
थक्यौ बीच बिहाल बिहवल सुनौ करूना मूल ।

H. 4 VARNik metres

Metres of this species are measured according to the number and arrangement of syllables (varna) to the line. They include some pada metres, such as the following:

II.4.1 Pada metre with trochee base (GL)

Seven repeats of the gana $/ \infty \sim \psi v /+G$. Though the conventional printed layout of this metre follows that of the kavitt (II.4.4), its structure is seen most clearly when laid out in four lines. Caesuras after the second and fourth ganas are often bolstered by the strong internal rhyme or alliteration which is a common feature of this type, as in the following example (from the sixteenth-century poet Harirām Vyās, see V. Gosvāmī 1952:269):

\begin{aligned}
& \text { सुरँग कुच उतंग अंग माधुरी तरंग रंग सुरत रंग मान भंग काम कामिनी । } \\
& \text { मंदहास भ्रू बिलास मधुर बैन नैन सैन बिबस करत पियहिं व्यासदास स्वामिनी ॥ }
\end{aligned}

II.4.2 Pada metre with cretic base ( $G L G$ )

Eight repeats of the gana $/ \sim \sim \sim /$. Caesura divisions follow the pattern of II.4.1. In the following example (from the Caurāsī-pad of Hit Harivamı́s, see R. Snell 1991a) the cretic rhythm is most fully represented in the teka:

-v-/-v-/ 1-v-/-v-
$$

आजु नीकी बनी राधिका नागरी ।
 ब्रज जुवति जूथ मैं रूप अरु चतुरई सील सिंगार गुन सबन तें आगरी ।

कमल दक्षिन भुजा बाम भुज अंस सखि गावती सरस मिंलि मधुर सुर राग री ।

सकल बिद्या बिदित रहसि हरिबंश हित मिलत नव कुंज बर स्याम बड़भाग री ॥

II.4.3 Savaiyã

Not to be confused with the mātrik metre samān savaiyā described above (II.3.3), this is a quatrain having AAAA rhyme and a characteristic rhythm of single long syllables alternating with paired short syllables. There are three main varieties:
(a) Matta-gayand or Mālt̄i: seven dactyls (bha-gana, - - v) + a final spondee (GG, -- );
(b) Kirīt: eight dactyls (bha-gaṇa, - - );
(c) Durmilā: eight anapaests (sa-gana, $\sim v-$ ).

Rather more than the usual amount of licence seems to be allowed in this metre in the counting of long vowels (especially $\bar{i}$ ) as short: a stress-based rhythm is perhaps here beginning to displace the strictly-measured syllabic basis of conventional Indo-Aryan metrics. Thus in the following Matta-gayand of Raskhān (SR 7), those unstressed long vowels marked $=$ must be counted as short:

यों रसखानि घिरचो सिगरो ब्रज कौन को कौन उपाय बिचारे।,

-     -         - -uv/- u-/- u-/ -u - - - - /- u - - - कोज न कान्हर के कर तें वह बैरिनि बाँसुरिया गहि जारे ॥

Note how the chāp 'rasakhāna', fits into the savaiyā rhythm. Different savaiyā types may be mixed within a single stanza: thus in SR 25, the Matta-gayand rhythm of lines 1, 2 and 4 is interrupted by line 3 in Durmila (with an extra guru).

II.4.2 Kavitt or Ghanākṣari

A quatrain in which each line has 31 or 32 syllables, whose value is not prescribed: counting is simply by the number of the syllables, regardless of length. A caesura usually follows the 16 th syllable, where the line is usually split graphically on the printed page; secondary caesuras may appear after the 8th and/or 24th syllables. Caesuras are sometimes marked with internal rhyme. As the length of the syllables is immaterial, and the main caesuras are shown by line-breaks, the example is given without scansion:

> गोरज बिराजे भाल लहलही बनमाल आगे गैया पाछे ग्वाल गावै मृदु तान री।
> तैसी धुनि बाँसुरी की मधुर मधुर तैसी
> बंक चितवनि मंद मंद मुसकानि री ॥
> कदम विटप के निकट तटनी के तट अटा चढ़ि चाहि पीत पट फहरानि री।
> रस बरसावै तन तपन बुझावै नैन प्राननि रिझावे वह आवै रसखानि री ॥

III. 1 LITERARY GENRES OF THE SIXTEENTH TO EIGHTEENTH CENTURIES ${ }^{1}$

The texts included in this reader represent some of the principal genres of devotional, court and other traditional poetry which came into prominence from the first half of the sixteenth century. Vernacular literature in the diverse regional languages of what is now called, with a misleading implication of linguistic and cultural homogeneity, the 'Hindi' area, was well established by this time: Sufi poetry written in Avadhi comprised one major tradition of the eastern part of the region, while eclectic traditions of Sant verse, in a mixed language often based on the Kharī Bolī dialect of the Delhi region, were a major current in the more westerly stream. In Rajasthan, centuries-old genres of epic and heroic verse flourished in vernaculars which would hardly be comprehensible to the residents of Banaras or Agra; and from West to East there existed vigorous styles of orally-composed ${ }^{1}$ Bibliographical Note: Braj Bhāṣā poetry is hardly to be appreciated without a familiarity with the main episodes of the life of Krṣna, whose $\overline{1} \bar{l} \bar{a}$ features so prominently in the majority of poems. A convenient summary is given in W.G. Archer 1957. The concept of lilā is discussed in D.R. Kinsley 1979. A. Dallapiccola 1982, and P. Banerjee 1978, give a full synopsis, with examples of the rich tradition of painting and iconography of Krșna-bhakti ; Dallapiccola also introduces the various sectarian traditions with which so much devotional literature is connected. N. Sheth 1984 (especially last chapter) and B. Preciado-Solis 1984 review Puranic developments; the Bhägavata is translated by G.V. Tagare 1976-78; F. Hardy 1983 gives a full treatment of the $\bar{A} l v a \bar{r}$ tradition. E. Zelliou 1976 gives a very useful (hough now dated) bibliographical essay on bhakti traditions.
F.S. Growse 1882 is still an invaluable resource on Braj traditions; for more recent encyclopaedic coverage see A.W. Entwistle 1987. K.Klostermaier 1969 gives a comparative perspective; M. Singer 1966 includes articles on various aspects of Krṣnaism; N. Hein 1972 gives a classic account of Braj performance traditions; C. Vaudeville 1976 describes the establishment of sectarian traditions in Braj, and 1980 reveals the complexity of religious reference underlying the Govardhan site and its myth. M. Corcoran 1980 discusses developments in the portrayal of Vrindaban in Vaiṣ̣ava literature.

On the Vallabha sect see R. Barz 1976 for an essential background to Krṣnaite hagiography; J.D. Redington 1983 for Vallabha's theology; R.J. Cohen 1984 for a particularly useful and succinct summary of sectarian history and practice; A. Ambalal 1987, P.J. Bennett 1983 and 1990, and A.-M. Gaston [1992] for temple traditions; K. Mulji 1865 for a celcbrated nineteenth-century scandal relating to the temple priests.

On the Caitanya sect, see J.T. O'Connell 1976 for a useful introduction; for more detail, see M.T. Kennedy 1925, S.K. De 1961, E.C. Dimock 1966, D.L. Haberman 1988a, N. Hein 1976, D.M. Wulff 1984. D.L. Haberman 1988b gives an extract from the hagiography Caitanya-caritāmfta. Articles on Rādhā appear in J.S. Hawley and D.M. Wulff 1982; Jayadeva is discussed in R. Sarkar 1974, B.S. Miller 1977, L. Siegel 1978 and S. Kakar 1985

For the Sanskrit antecedents of Braj Bhāṣā court poetry see D.H.H. Ingalls 1965 and J. Brough 1968. The fullest coverage of the entire pre-modern period of Hindi literature is given in R.S. McGregor 1984, the standard reference work. Musical settings of Braj verse are discussed in Peter Manuel 1989. An essential corrective to the view suggested so far that Hindu culture was predominant throughout our period and area is given by R. Russell and K. Islam in their classic 1968 account of late Mughal poetry.
poetry which modern taxonomies would label as 'folk' literature - another important source for the more self-consciously literary verse later patronized by the temple and the royal court. The diversity of these complementary varieties of literature typifies the heterogeneity of the cultural amalgam which existed in the late medieval period.

III.1.1 The Cultural Significance of Braj and its Language

The area of Braj (Sanskrit 'Vraja') has an ancient and culturally complex history, having sustained over the centuries a wide array of religious traditions both local and classical. Yet despite its ancient importance as a centre of Buddhism, and despite the continuing centrality of devī-worship among its rural inhabitants, Braj is now virtually synonymous with the traditions of devotional Vaiṣnavism - more specifically, Kṛṣaism - which arose during the first decades of the sixteenth century; and it is through this Krṣnaite association that Braj Bhāṣā, of all the regional varieties of 'Hindi' used for literary composition, came to its position as a first among equals.

While Vaiṣnava sectarian and pilgrimage activity in the Braj region dates back only to the late medieval age, the region had long been eulogized in the Sanskrit Puränas on the basis of its identification as the site of Krṣna's earthly incarnation. Modern redactions of the Krṣna myth tend to present it as a coherent and monolithic narrative, derived readymade, as it were, from classical sources. But the portrayal of Krṣna through the successive Purānas, and later through the more condensed chronology of sectarian reworkings of the Krṣna myth, can be seen developing and growing with the passage of time - a process of change which the devout Vaiṣnava, of course, would see as one of progressive revelation and discovery rather than of invention and embellishment. Thus through the early medieval period the portrayal of Krṣna's character developed from that of folk hero to divinity, as the robust and earthy narrative of the fourth-century Harivamisa gave way to the transcendental devotionalism of the enormously influential Bhāgavata Purāna (BhP), composed in South India sometime around the ninth century. The Harivaḿśa, a kind of appendix to the Mahäbhärata, emphasizes the rustic aspect of the Krṣna myth, with Krṣna's miraculous accomplishments being described as the acts of a folk hero; the Bhägavata, by comparison, describes Krṣna in a sublime haze of spirituality, his superhuman deeds being represented as līlā or 'divine sport' undertaken without purpose. The Viṣnu Purāna occupies an intermediate position in this development, both chronologically and in content.

A catalyst of this process of change was the devotional tradition of the Ālvārs, a group of non-brahmanical Vaiṣnava poets active in the Tamil country from about the sixth century, whose bhakti was marked by an intensely personal and emotional character stressing the pain felt by the human soul in separation from God. Another important influence on the development of Vaiṣnava bhakti and its literature was the Sanskrit lyric poem Gïtagovinda, written by Jayadeva in Orissa in the twelfth century, which depicts Rādhā and Kṛ̣na's clandestine love-making in the lush and paradisiac setting of a grove on the bank of the Yamuna river. This text, which quickly became popular in dance and song traditions all over India, emphasizes the erotic element in the Krṣna myth and establishes in particular the central role of Rādhā as Kṛna's beloved; for up to this point Rādhā, though mentioned in Prakrit poems as early as the second century, had yet to appear in mainstream Vaiṣnava sources - to the embarrassment of later theologians, who had to contrive explanations for her absence from even the authoritative BhP.

Despite the widespread influence of the BhP and the Gitagovinda, there was little cultic activity in the geographical area of Braj until several centuries after their composition. But the favourable political and cultural circumstances of the late medieval period were to see the rapid development of Vaiṣnavism throughout India, leading to the rise of major traditions of devotional poetry in a range of vernacular languages from West to East. Two principal varieties of bhakti - the saguṇ type, dedicated primarily to the worship of Räma and Kṛ̣na as incarnate deities, and the nirguṇ type, which perceived God in abstract, nonanthropomorphic terms - became established, not as discrete alternatives to each other but rather as complementary modes of religious thought with a broad popular base. Focal points for these traditions were provided by sectarian communities called sampradāy (to be translated as 'sect' only with the caveat that the sense 'splinter group of an established church' does not apply here); each of the various Kṛṣnaite sampradāys stems from the teachings of a spiritual leader who in some way wrought a variation on the Krṣnaism of the BhP by emphasizing one or other aspect of its devotional teaching, or whose charisma was of itself sufficient to attract a substantial and coherent following. The Krṣna sampradāys have the additional focus of one or more of the particular Krṣna-images ( $s v a r u \bar{u}$ ), whose temples form the centre of sectarian activity.

It was against this background that the South Indian theologian Vallabha (1479-1531) and the Bengali mystic Kṛṇa Caitanya (1486-1533) gave a newly literal interpretation to the significance of Braj by identifying particular geographical localities as the very places where Krṣṇa's hīlā, graphically portrayed in the BhP, had actually been enacted in historical time; by so doing, they established Braj as an important Vaiṣnava centre in which the local vernacular, Braj Bhāṣā, came naturally to be regarded as the appropriate vehicle for contemporary devotional literature. The Vallabha sampradāy (often called 'Puṣti Mārg', interpreted as 'path of grace') and the Caitanya sampradāy (or 'Gauḍīya sampradāy', named after the Bengal province of Gaud from where many early adherents came) are two of the many sects whose presence and activities in Braj extend into the modern era. Such sectarian traditions of Kṛnna-worship first flourished in Braj during the more tolerant phases of Muslim rule, whose power-bases of Delhi and Agra were only a short distance from this Vaiṣnava holy land; numerous temples were built from the early decades of the sixteenth century; and although the catholic policies of Akbar's administration were reversed by later emperors (notably by the iconoclastic Aurangzeb), Braj was to remain an important centre of Vaiṣnava pilgrimage to be compared with the tirthas of Dwarka and Puri.

Thus it was that Braj Bhāṣā found itself elevated to the status of a major literary language cultivated well beyond the borders of its own spoken currency, and later adapted to literary uses only remotely related to the devotionalism which accounted for its initial rise as a poetic medium. Its supremacy was to remain unchallenged until the nineteenth century, when increasing contact with Western culture caused the ground-plan of written literature to be re-drawn, with Kharī Bolī coming into prominence as both lingua franca and literary language throughout the Hindi-speaking area. Insofar as it is maintained as the language of lyrics in the twentieth-century repertoire of classical Hindustani music, and because devotional Krṣnaism continues to be a major aspect of the living Hindu tradition, Braj Bhāṣā can still lay claim to a position of prominence in the culture of Northern India.

III.1.2 Principal Trends in Braj Bhāṣā Literature

The Krṣna literature of the period under discussion was the product of various elements inherited from preceding centuries. In language and prosody it was the descendant of the Middle Indo-Aryan Apabhramśa; in lexicon it added to this heritage the resources of indigenous vocabulary, of literary loans from Sanskrit, and of current loans from Persian (including many Arabic words); in content it drew heavily on the Sanskrit Vaiṣnava literature, particularly the Purạnas, and on the elaborately described contexts and rhetorical categories of Sanskrit court poetry; and in style, imagery and sentiment it owed much to the timeless themes of folksong, whose lovers' laments and romantic imagery reflect the cycle of the seasons in a rural setting. All these elements are to be found in the lyric form known as the pada, a metrically simple song composed in rhyming couplets, comprising the most ubiquitous form in bhakti verse. A corpus of devotional padas is typically referred to as $b \bar{a} n \bar{i}$ (Skt vān̄̄1), 'speech', implying 'divinely inspired utterance'.

The collections of padas and other verse types which have come down to us through the centuries have been subject to influences of many kinds, notably the changing vagaries of scribal convention in respect of orthography, the priorities of compilers as they assembled collections intended to reflect a particular sectarian theology, and the various changes to wording and metre which result from a verse being handed on orally from one generation of singers to another. Thus there is often a question-mark hanging over individual poems in respect of their 'authenticity', if by that term we mean the certain and verifiable attribution of a poem to a given historical figure. The situation is further complicated by the fact that the traditional sectarian hagiologies are themselves based on piously optimistic expectations as to the manner (and length!) of a poet's life, and are hardly to be relied upon as historical accounts: thus neither the biography of a poet nor the literary corpus attributed to him can be used as a reliable yardstick against which to assess the other. The concerns of objective historicity are of course both irrelevant and irreverent in the eyes of the bhakta, for whom a poem's spiritual authority alone is sufficient testimony to its pedigree; but the more sceptical outside observer must have recourse to the manuscript tradition, whose evidence can often help to build up a historically accurate genealogy for the poems, and which can often be used to postulate reconstructions of a corrupt text. This book includes some texts whose attribution to named authors is beyond reasonable doubt, and others whose attribution, though long-standing, may have been as much a part of the formulaically creative element of tradition as the composition of the poem itself.

Both in terms of their content and in terms of the textual problems of the kind just outlined, the padas of the sixteenth-century poets Sūrdās (3) and Mīrā (4) are typical of their genre. Their themes centre on descriptive eulogies of Krṣna, often alluding to the numerous līlās too well known to the bhakta audience to call for a full serial narrative. Starting points for the poems are some of the mental attitudes of Vaiṣnava devotionalism: vinay or humble entreaty to a loving deity; vātsalya or the feeling of parental fondness felt towards Kṛṣna as divine child; mādhurya, the sentiment of romantic and erotic love which the devotee achieves by assuming the attitude of a gopi; and the concomitant sensation of virah, the pain of separation felt by the gopis when deserted by their lover. Though apparently simple in their narrative and descriptive registers, poems of this kind bear for their intended audience at least - levels of meaning and symbolic devotional significance hard to suggest through their inevitably banal translations in English. Much of the charm of the poems derives from the homely idiom in which they are couched, as the human aspect of Krṣna is stressed in such a way as to make him accessible to the lay devotee: devotional poets such as Sūr make much of their fascination with the paradox of epiphany - that Krṣna, who is the supreme God, can appear manifest in human form. Sürdās and Mīrā may be said together to represent the exemplar of Krṣṇa-bhakti poets: much imitated, they maintain an enormous popularity to the present day.

In view of recent South Asian realities it may seem surprising to find Muslim poets prominent amongst the prime creators of Krṣna-bhakti literature: but the combination of a Muslim-dominated political structure with a largely Hindu populace fostered a cultural symbiosis which was richly productive in the interconnected realms of music, art and literature. Though hardly a 'melting-pot of cultures', as it is sometimes described, the relatively liberal ambiance of Akbar's reign (1556-1605) in particular made possible a commonality of culture hardly to be found in the literary traditions of the modern subcontinent. Nowhere is this tendency better illustrated than in the literary output of Akbar's courtier and general Abdurrahīm Khānkhānā, known to Hindi literature as the poet Rahïm (6). That the characteristics of noble birth, military prowess and poetic talent should all be so conspicuously present in the same person was symptomatic of the cultural sophistication of the age - a feature shared with so many European courts of the same period. Rahīm took enthusiastically to Krṣnaite themes in his poetry, though unsurprisingly he tended to tone down their religious aspect in favour of a more generalized portrayal of the feelings of virah occasioned by Kṛṇa's absence. A less circumspect adoption of Vaiṣnava attitudes is apparent in the lyrical verses of Raskhān (5), allegedly a Pathan convert to Vaiṣnavism and an initiate of the Vallabha sampradāy. His spry, elegant and often highly alliterative poems describe the gopis' relationship with Krṣna as cowherd, together with stylistically elaborate praise of Krṣna himself and of the benefits of devotion to him.

While many Krṣna-bhakti poets were 'freelance' in respect of sectarian allegiance, the sampradāys deriving from the charismatic religious leadership of such figures as Vallabha and Caitanya continued to flourish and expand during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Their development can be traced in the contemporary hagiologies, whose quasihistorical chronicles aimed to incite devotion through an idealized portrayal of the more-orless sanctified figures of sectarian leaders, divines, teachers, and poets. Little or no distinction is made in these texts between mythological and historical figures, and as noted earlier, such hagiologies cannot be regarded as historical sources in the strict sense; but they give a valuable insight into the psychology of bhakti, and are often the only contemporary sources of any kind relating to the lives of bhakti poets. The Vallabhan vārtā chronicles (2), which constitute an early example of Braj Bhāṣā prose, are among the most important of such texts; a later hagiology, the Rasik-ananya-māl of Bhagavat Mudit (7), portrays early devotees of the Rādhāvallabh sect and is written in a workaday style in the caupā̄̄ metre (with its variant caupā̄), whose vigorous rhyming rhythm had established it as a favourite narrative metre in the prestigious Avadhī models of Tulsidās and the Sufi poets.

Rahīm's exploitation of the ambivalent sensuality of Kṛṇaite themes shows how readily the rhetoric of bhakti can be transferred to a more secular context. In the court poetry of the seventeenth century we see the coming together of conventionally devotional themes with a wide range of aphoristic and romantic conceits both ancient and contemporary. Traditional histories of Hindi literature tend to classify the so-called rīti or 'mannerist' court poetry, in which content is secondary in importance to the style of its expression, as a development chronologically distinct from the 'bhakti era'. But in fact the composition of devotional verse was never fully superseded by that of the more secular genres, and much verse is in any case ambiguous in terms of its position on the 'secular'/'religious' continuum. Thus among the romantic situations comprising the stock-in-trade of such rīti poets as Bihārīlal (8) are many which retain the figures of Kṛṣna and Rādhā as hero and heroine. Bihārī is truly one of the brightest stars of Braj Bhāṣā poetry. His couplets are compiled in the form of a Satsaī, a collection of (nominally) 700 couplets in the dohā metre which, with its inverted variant the sorthā, had long been the staple of Hindi poets of all styles: whether in the pithy aphorisms of Kabir, or in the connected narrative of epic poems (where it provides a foil to the caupāī's pounding beat), or in the condensed brilliance of Bihāri’'s verses, the dohā has proved itself the ideal couplet form (and a verse type never adequately to be replaced in the rather different world of modern Hindi poetics). Bihārī is unsurpassed in his use of the dohā, matching originality of thought with vividness and aptness of expression in a way designed to gratify the courtly patron and, given the timelessness of his subject-matter, equally certain to delight the modern reader. The masterly compression of literal and implied meaning into two brief lines leads Bihārīs poems to be popularly characterized by the phrase gāgar mẽ sāgar 'an ocean in a pitcher'. Many of the tropes and poetic conceits adopted by Bihārī and his contemporaries can be shown to derive from Sanskrit court poetry: but in no sense is this a pastiche literature, for poets such as Bihārī bring to their verse all the freshness and spontaneity of the vernacular tradition.

It is easy to imagine that many of Bihäri's couplets may have been inspired by incidents at the various courts in which he received patronage. The same applies with the Nīti-satsaī of Vṛnd (10), a poet from the Rajput court of Kishengarh, whose couplets on 'polity' are the stuff of metaphor and offer a kind of training in the art of lifemanship within the prescriptive norms of dharma. Texts of this satsai type again owe much to Sanskrit and Prakrit models, both in terms of their imagery and in terms of their character as compendiums of independent aphorisms on loosely connected themes.

The reflection in vernacular court poetry of its Sanskrit exemplars led inevitably to its analysis in terms of the traditional conventions of alañkāras̄āstra, the science of Sanskrit literary rhetoric. This had two main facets: a detailed taxonomy of hero and heroine (nāyak and nāyikā, the genre being known as nāyak-nāyikā bhed) which categorized the various types of poetic characters, differentiating for example between such varieties as proṣitapatik $\bar{a}$ - 'she whose husband is abroad', and kalahāntaritā - 'the one separated by a quarrel'; and secondly the analysis of linguistic and literary figures of speech, with careful distinctions of the various types of alliteration, metaphor, double entendre and so on. A third type dealt with prosody. This analytical literature virtually eclipsed in prominence the verse it purported to analyse; it is to be seen as a genre in its own right rather than as a secondary literature comparable to Western literary criticism. Rhetorical works typically alternated verses of definition and example, often with extreme minuteness of detail and at challenging length; one of the more concise texts is the Bhāsābhūsaṇ of Jasvant Simh, maharajah of Jodhpur in the mid seventeeth century (9).

The proclivities of courtly entertainment underlie much poetry of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. While devotional poetry continued to be written in large quantities, often within the framework of sectarian traditions whose autonomy one from another was jealously maintained, courtly fashions required a less pious and more overtly secular bias to be given to the old bhakti contexts. An almost impudently overt adaptation of a traditional theme is found among the large output of the early eighteenth-century poet Dev, whose poem Astayām (11) describes the hedonistic daily routine of a palace-dwelling heroine in terms of a ritual programme borrowed from the daily round of temple sacraments.

As the rhetoricians' codifying of poetic conventions led to an inevitable stereotyping of poetic composition, poetry began increasingly to contain set-pieces of rhetorical description, often following Sanskrit models, though blended with elements of regional or 'folk' culture: favourite subjects were 'toe-to-head' (nakh-sikh) descriptions of the heroine, poetic listings of attributes such as the 'sixteen adornments' (solah Sringār or navsat Srrigār), and two related season-cycles - 'songs of the twelve months' (bārah-māsā ) and 'descriptions of the six seasons' (sad-rtu-varnan ) - in which virah lamentations are set against the imagery of the successive seasons. An example of this last type is found in a mid eighteenth century rīti work, the Ras-prabodh of Gulām Nabī Raslin (12). Though nominally devotional in terms of subject matter, such poems are artistic creations first and foremost, and do not attempt to reproduce the devout intensity of Mīrā and Sūr. Nevertheless, bhakti continued to inspire the more pious poets such as Sāvant Simha, ruler of the Rajput state of Kishengarh in the mid eighteenth century, who wrote with great energy and some skill under the name 'Nāgarīdās' ('Rādhā's slave'); his Arill-pacīsī (13) is a deft synopsis of aspects of Krṣna's $\overline{1} 1 \bar{a}$, making up for any lack of originality in thematic treatment with a proficient hand in the composition of the arill quatrain.
'Popular wisdom' literature of the type exemplified in Vṛnd's couplets reappears in the serpentine verses of Giridhar 'Kavirāy', self-styled 'Prince of poets', or perhaps 'Poet Laureate', who was probably active in the mid-eighteenth century. His verses exploit the unsatiable public appetite for sententious verse of a type which makes its point more through nimbleness of phrasing than through any real cogency of thought: though they are infinitely memorable and useful rhetorically for the clinching of an argument, one feels that the drift of poems such as Giridhar's might readily be reversed if metre or rhyme were to require it. A selection of Giridhar's poems was included in an early nineteenth-century chrestomathy of Braj Bhāṣā verse, the Sabhā-bilās (14) of Lallūlāl, whose output also included a Braj prose version of Sanskrit fables, here entitled Rāj-nīti (1). Alongside Giridhar's pat aphorisms, the Sabhā-bilās included also some of the risqué riddles called Mukrī or Kah-mukrī, whose atribution to the thirteenth century polymath Amir Khusrau seems to be belied by the relatively modern dress of the poems themselves, at least in their received form.

Like Giridhar, many minor poets continued to re-work the old themes and conceits; but increasing contact with Western culture in the nineteenth century was eventually to lead to new perceptions as to the nature and purpose of literature, and to signal the end of a poetical tradition which was already well advanced down a path of decadent decline.

III. 2 POETS AND TEXTUAL SOURCES

II.2.1 Lallūlāl: Rāj-nīti (RN)

Lallūlāl ('Lallūjī Lāl'), c. 1763-1825, was a 'bhakha munshi' at the College of Fort William, founded in Calcutta in 1800, whose task was to produce language-teaching texts for the British employees of the Raj. He is best known for his Prem-sāgar - a Kharị Boli prose version of the tenth book of the BhP - which despite its original pedagogical purpose achieved and retains wide popularity as a fluent and accessible version of the great devotional classic. Other works were similarly based ultimately on Sanskrit originals: the 'Hindustani' (i.e. Urdu) Simimāsan-battīsīand Baitāl-paccīsī; and two principal texts in Braj Bhāṣā - a commentary on the Satsaì of Bihārilāl (8), in the introduction to which he describes his early career, and $R \bar{a} j$-nitti published in 1809. Rāj-nīti is a collection of fables from the Sanskrit Hitopadeśa, with some additions from the Pañcatantra (itself the source for the Hitopadesa). The tales, narrated by the Brahmin preceptor of the sons of a king called Amaraśakti, are often told in a 'story within a story' format, though for present purposes the core stories have been separated out from their frame stories for clarity. Lallūlāl retains many characteristics of the Sanskrit originals, such as the frequent use of synonyms. His Braj Bhāsā shows some of the modernizing influence of contemporary Khaṛī Bolī, for example in his use of the Persian cj. ki 'that' (cf. jo in VV etc.).

The text is from Lallu Lal 1854, selections being from the pages here indicated: 1-p.84; 2-p.47; 3-p.57; 4-p.55; 5-p.123; 6-p.89; 7-p.65. For Lallülāl's career see R.S. McGregor 1973b. Various translations of RN were made during its currency as a set book, though all are long since out of print; that of J.R.A.S. Lowe (1853) is an example. For a translation of the Pañcatantra see A. Ryder 1955; for the Hitopadesa see C. Wilkins 1885 or F. Johnson 1928. The tradition of Indian 'beast' stories is discussed in H.H. Gowen 1968, chapter Xxx; for the comic element of the stories see L. Siegel 1987:61 (and passim).

The early history of the sect of Vallabha centres on Vallabha himself, and on his son Vitṭhalnäth (c.1515-88) who succeeded him as leader of the sect and who greatly expanded its activities and influence. Incidents in the lives of Vallabha and Vitthalnāth, and of their 84 and 252 disciples respectively, are related in the prose hagiologies entitled respectively Caurāsī vaiṣnavan kī vārtā and Do sau bāvan vaiṣ̣avan kī vārtā. Both texts are ascribed to Vitthalnāth's son Gokulnāth (c. 1551-1647), though their actual history is uncertain: in modern editions, the texts are accompanied by the Bhāv-prakās commentary of Harirāy, Gokulnāth's disciple who was probably also responsible for compiling the original texts from oral traditions deriving from Gokulnāth's time. Many of the episodes in these two texts relate closely to the sectarian image of Srināth, whose temple at Govardhan in Braj formed the original centre of the sect (though Aurangzeb's iconoclastic policies in the late seventeenth century meant that Srīnāth, along with many other Braj deities, had to be spirited away to the safe refuge of neighbouring Rajput states: Srīnāth was taken from Govardhan in 1669, eventually to be installed in a new temple at what was to become the pilgrimage town of Nathdwara, near Udaipur).

The vārtā texts form a popular source of information about the sect's history and attitudes, and are intended as an aid to the devotional life. Though at best quasi-historical, the loosely linked stories of the värtās are often the only available source for 'biographies' of the sectarian poets. The narratives rest on an underlying assumption as to the nature of reality as perceived through bhakti, namely that each devotee living out a life in the mundane or laukika realm exists also in a transcendental or alaukika mode of reality in which he or she is one of the characters in the eternal līlā of Kṛṣna. Harirāy's Bhāv-prakās commentary has recourse to this concept when justifying any incongruities in the worldly attitudes of the devotees: apparent deviations of behaviour in their laukika lives are simply attributed to causes in the alaukika sphere. Because of the so-called 'three lives' of the devotees (before and after initiation, and in the līla mode), the vārtās are designated tīn janma kī $\overline{1} l a \bar{a} v a \bar{l} \overline{1}$. Further features of the chronicles are the prominence of the guru as intermediary between Krṣna and devotee, with the text stressing always the hereditary authority of Vallabha's descendants in the gosvāmī lineage; and the use of narrative context to put a particular gloss on verses ascribed to the sectarian poets.

Three selections are given here, the first two from Caurāsī vaiṣnavan kī vārtā, the third from Do sau bāvan vaiṣnavan kā vārtā : (i) a pair of incidents from the vārtā of Sūrdās (3), treating firstly his alleged meeting with the emperor Akbar (a chronological possibility if not a historical reality), and secondly a domestic crisis resolved by the compassionate intervention of Srināth himself; (ii) the sectarian initiation of a dancing girl through the good offices of Kṛ̣nadās, a contemporary of Sūr and fellow-member of the so-called Astachāp group of poets whose texts form the mainstay of sectarian Vallabhite hymnody; (iii) the conversion of Raskhān (4), the Pathan who became a devotee of Srīnāth and one of the most popular of Braj Bhāṣā poets. The commentary is here distinguished from the main text by smaller type and indented paragraphs.

The sections on Sūrdās and Kṛṣnadās are from P.D. Mītal 1951:27-32, 41-43 and D. Parikh 1970:546-549 respectively; some of the Bhāv-prakās glosses have here been excised, as shown by dots [...]. These texts are translated, with introduction, in R. Barz 1976; Shyam Das 1985 gives a very free English synopsis of the Caurāsī vaiṣnavan kī vārtā (but removes the vital distinction between text and commentary). For further discussion of the Sūrdās vārtā see J.S. Hawley 1984 (chapter 1), and of the Krṣnadās vārtā see R. Barz 1987. The section on Raskhān is from B. Sarmā and D. Parikh 1951-53:299-304; for discussion and synopsis see M. Corcoran 1983 and R. Snell 1989. The broader background to the history of the sect is given in A.W. Entwistle 1987 (chapter 5); and see ibid. pp. 91-95 on the sublimation of Raskhān's stereotyped homosexuality in the context of the 'femininity' of the human soul.
III.2.3 Sūrdās: Sūr-sāgar (SS)

The traditional account of the life of Sürdās is that given in the vārtā discussed above (2): born in 1478 to a Brahmin family in a village near Delhi, he was blind from birth, but blessed with an inner vision through which he perceived the divinity of Krṣna, of whom he sang devotional songs; contact with Vallabha led him to follow the BhP as a model for his songs and to dedicate himself in service of the sectarian deity of Śināth at Govardhan; he was one of the astachāp group of eight poets convened there by Vitṭhalnâth; though not mentioning Vallabha by name in any of his verses, Sürdās proclaimed in a death-bed statement that he perceived no distinction between Krṣna and Vallabha and that all his hymns in praise of Krṣna related equally to Vallabha.

Perhaps no single aspect of the vārtā account summarized here is historical. The hagiography has grown in the telling within a sectarian tradition anxious to claim Sūrdās as its own; and likewise the number of padas attributed to Sūr has grown in the singing, verses bearing the chāp or 'poetic signature' of Sūrdās having swelled bhajan repertoires for centuries. The published text of the $S \bar{u}$ r-sāgar must accordingly be seen as representing the 'Sūr tradition' rather than an integral corpus attributable to any one historical figure.

Included here are poems of four main types: those of humble supplication or vinay (110), often using extended metaphors in confessions of impiety and in entreaty for salvation; those depicting the child Krṣna (11-27), especially as 'butter-thief' (mākhancor) and in the related ükhal-bandhan episode; Krṣna's youth, his flute as summoner to the dance and as rival for the gopis' affections, his consort Rädhă, and his beauty as a cowherd (28-34); and the gopis' complaint to Uddhava, who tries to persuade them to the nirgun view in which Krṣna is to be perceived as an abstract entity (35-40). A verse in which K r ṣna as king of Dwarka nostalgically recalls his days in Braj concludes the selection (41).

The text is taken from N.D. Vajpeyi 1972-76 (see Concordance, p. 51). For translation and evaluation of Sūrdās see C. Vaudeville 1971, K.E. Bryant 1978, J.S. Hawley 1983 and 1984. A facsimile of an important early Sūrsāgar manuscript is given in G.N. Bahura 1984. Recent research on the history of the text is summarized in J.S. Hawley 1979 and K.E. Bryant 1983. The theme of Krṣna as ‘divine child’ is discussed in C.S.J. White 1970.
III.2.4 Mīrā: Padāvalī (MP)

Mīrā, or Mīrābāī, a near contemporary of Sūrdās, was born in the Rajput royal family of Merta, and was betrothed (perhaps unwillingly) in a marriage alliance with the royal house of Mewar. Many of her poems contain references to the persecution she received from her husband's family, who apparently objected to her abandonment of worldly values as she gave herself over completely to her religious calling. It is difficult to know to what extent her own poetic references to this persecution, including an attempted poisoning (see the chappay of Nābhādās, II.2.8 above) are metaphorical; but she has come to be regarded as the exemplar of single-minded spiritual dedication, a theme constantly voiced in her padas.

Mīrā's songs have been handed down largely through oral tradition, and there is no definitive text. Gujarati, Rajasthani and Braj Bhāṣā versions of her padas exist, but even these traditions do not cohere as discrete recensions, and they no doubt include much material from later centuries. The poems given here, taken from an edition which has collected them under the blanket title Padāvalī, can at least claim the authority attributable to a received text in current use: the popular vote, rather than the scholarly imprimatur.

All of Mīrā's verses express her love for Krṣna, usually addressed as 'Giridhar' though the salvific aspect of Krṣna as 'mountain-holder' is not otherwise prominent in her poems. Her devotion is expressed in the outspoken terms of a lover beset by the pain of separation, especially as set in stark contrast to the socially conventional expectations of the world around her. She flaunts her attitude challengingly, stressing the efficacy of time spent in the company of the devout; and her tone is a mixture of celebration and lament, its expression of virah often seeming to reflect the tone, though not necessarily the theology, of the Sant poets. In language and content, the poems included here are close to those poems of Sūr most likely to represent an early stratum of the $S \bar{u} r$-sāgar; their rhetorical structure is simple, making only very limited use of extended metaphor or linear narrative, the imagery being typically compounded rather than developed in any systematic way. Occurrences of the retroflex nasal (as in pān̄̄, naiṇā) reflect the Rajasthani origin of or Gujarati influence on these Braj Bhāṣā versions of the poems, a reminder of the uncertainty surrounding the history of these most abidingly popular of devotional songs.

The text is taken from P. Caturvedi 1954 (see Concordance, p.51). (A later edition, 1973, has a markedly greater proportion of retroflex forms, but without any convincing evidence of greater textual authenticity.) The materials for Mïra’'s biography are reviewed in H. Goetz 1966, A.J. Alston 1980 (from whom the apt 'courtly' has been borrowed as a translation for nägara ) and J.S. Hawley & M. Juergensmeyer 1988; for translations see Alston, Hawley, and U.S. Nilsson 1969.
III.2.5 Raskhān: Sujān-raskhān (SR)

Raskhān's vārtā hagiography is included in this reader (2); it portrays him as a lusty and somewhat gauche Pathan paedophile converted to Krṣna-bhakti by the sight of a portrait of Srināth; but this account must of course be read with the usual caution as regards historicity. A heading to the vārtā text gives his name as Saiyid Ibrahïm; 'Raskhān', an epithet of Krṣna meaning 'mine of rasa' and so used as the poet's chäp, can be read as including, by design or convenient coincidence, the Persian title khān often suffixed to Pathan names. In a poem entitled Prem-vātikā, Raskhān alludes to his leaving Delhi following an insurrection which turned the capital into a 'burning-ground', and perhaps dateable to the 1550 s.

The Prem-vāṭikā is in dohās; but Raskhān is best known for his poems in the savaiyā and kavitt quatrain metres which, with their distinctly contrasted rhythmic cadences, are often used as complementary styles within a single work (though more typically by riti poets such as Ghanānand and Dev than in bhakti verse). Individual stanzas in these metres, mixed with occasional dohās and sorthās, are assembled in a collection sometimes given the title Sujān-raskhān. They portray Krṣna as cowherd and as lover, sometimes as saviour, their overall mood being celebratory and playful; even in a virah context the tone remains bright and light-hearted, quite free of the mournful plangency of poets such as Mirā. Raskhān is more concerned to celebrate the beauty of Krṣna and the perfection of love for him than to retail episodes from his tillās. He also seems less restrained in his use of sensual imagery than many contemporary poets, for whom devotionalism perhaps entails a more stringently pious tone. Raskhān's use of language is witty and elegant, full of alliteration and rhythmic invention. He is fond of capping the first three lines of a poem with some sort of dénouement of the final line (e.g. stanzas 3, 5, 9, 15). Certain of his verses encapsulate the very essence of Braj Krṣnaism and are hence among the most popular of all bhakti lyrics: verses 5 and 9 celebrate the paradox of epiphany, verse 1 declares that devotion to Krṣna yields joys so great as to outstrip salvation.

Editions vary widely as to their total number of verses. The text is taken from Bābū Amīr Simh 1956 (see Concordance, p. 51); all 25 stanzas are also included in V.P. Miśra 1947 and D.S. Bhāṭ̄ 1977, with the exception of 22 (absent in Miśra); some readings from these editions have been followed as noted. The regular disposition of savaiyās and kavitts given in this book is for convenience of layout only. For a discussion of the värtā of Raskhān see M. Corcoran 1983 and R. Snell 1989.
II.2.6 Rahīm: Barvai (RB)

Abdurrahīm 'Khānkhānā' (1556-1627) was the son of Bairam Khān, who was a courtier of the Mughal emperor Humayun and later guardian and regent to the young Akbar: Bairam Khān was, until his fall from power, the most powerful man in the Mughal court. The young Abdurrahim was thus brought up in a situation of unique privilege and high culture, where he acquired proficiency in numerous languages and arts.

Rahīm's wide poetic gifts embraced the languages of his own cultural heritage Persian, Turkish and Arabic - as well as what must have appeared the relatively parochial tradition of Braj Bhāṣā and Avadhī. His modest collection of Braj poetry consists mainly of couplets; universality of idiom and clarity of language ensure his continuing popularity. He was among the first to harness the dohā as a vehicle for aphorisms straddling sacred and profane contexts, epitomized in the following well-known verse (S.B. Simh 1961:309):

अब रहीम मुसकिल पड़ी, गढ़े दोऊ काम । साँचे से तो जग नहीं, झूठे मिलें न राम ॥

Perplexity must be our lot, whichever way we turn.
If true, we lose the world we love: if false, then God we spurn.
Rahim is particularly associated with the tiny couplet called barvai, in which a maximum of sentiment is compressed into a very brief metrical line: it was perhaps under Rahīm's influence that Tulsī wrote a miniature Rāmāyan in this metre. Two barvai collections exist: one is a rhetorical work on nāyikā-bhed ; the other, drawn on here, is a loosely connected series of verses on the Krṣna theme. With their descriptions of virah against the background of the changing seasons, these verses resemble a bārahmāsā lament, though they do not amount to a systematic treatment of that theme.

Our selection opens with the first six verses of the full poem, comprising a conventional salutation to Ganes and other deities (see III.3.1). The subsequent verses deal mostly with the virah theme; abrupt changes of context, such as that between verses 16 and 17, are found as much in the full text as in this selection - evidence that this work is to be seen as 'theme and variations' rather than as a structured piece of rhetorical or narrative composition. The fact that the text includes couplets in Persian (obviously not included here) again suggests that this is a compilation of only loosely connected verses.

The effectiveness of these couplets derives largely from their succinctness. The second pāda of the barvai line, being only seven mātrās in length, usually comprises only three or two words (or even a single word, as in line 2.1 etc.) such that the syntax of the whole poetic line is much less evenly balanced than in, say, the relatively four-square construction of the dohā: this gives the closing cadence of the line a laconic effect which Rahim exploits to the full, often reserving this space for the semantic burden of the line.

The text is taken from S.B.Simh 1961 (see Concordance, p. 51). A summary of Rahīm's life and of works by and about Rahīm is given in J.B.Chaudhurī 1954 (whose contention that 'Barves of Rahīm are composed in Abadhī Hindī; Barve cannot be composed in Vraja Bhāṣā’ seems however to relate to the nāyikā-bhed verses rather than those included here - though the diminutive suffix - $v \bar{a}$, a feature of both texts, is indeed an eastern feature). R. Snell 1991b discusses metrical and other aspects of RB.

III.2.7 Bhagvat Mudit: Rasik-ananya-māl (RAM)

Bhagvat Mudit, a member of the Caitanya sampradāy who lived in Agra, is known as the author of a Vṛndāvan-Satak (1650) and of an important if rather prosaic hagiology of Rādhāvallabhīs, the undated Rasik-ananya-māl. (Bhagvat Mudit is himself the subject of a stanza in that exemplar of Hindi hagiologies, the Bhaktamāl of Nābhādās, though the authenticity of this verse has been questioned on chronological grounds.) The Rādhāvallabh sampradāy is a sect whose origins lie in the devotional attitude of Hit Harivaḿśs (1502-52), especially as expressed through his Braj Bhāṣā work Caurāsī-pad; the present-day activities of the sect, which has produced enormous quantities of devotional verse, centre on the Vrindaban temple dedicated to the image of Krṣna as Rādhāvallabh, 'lover of Rādhā', maintained by descendants of Hit Harivams. The fact that one of the earliest Rādhāvallabhī hagiologies should have been written by a Caitanyite suggests that contemporary relations between the sampradāys had not yet degenerated to the routine antagonism which sadly typifies later sectarian developments.

The importance of the RAM lies in its being a source for sectarian history, rather than in any literary sophistication; it should be remembered that the traditional history of sectarian institutions and their (alleged) members rests largely on just such texts as this. It is written in caupā̄̄ and dohā, a favourite combination for narrative verse. The text contains brief biographies, called paracaī, of 36 devotees, including well-known poets such as Dhruvdās and Harirām Vyās as well as sectarian figures such as the kāyasth Sundardās, builder of the original temple of Rādhāvallabh and dīvān of Abdurrahīm 'Khānkhānā' (6). The paracaī given here is the first in the text, and tells the story of a local rajah named Narvāhan, a convert to the Rādhāvallabh sect, who imprisoned a Jain trader only to release him when the prisoner (deceitfully) professed himself a fellow-disciple of Hit Harivamis. At the happy outcome of the tale, Harivamís rewarded Narvāhan by dedicating to him two padas which appear in the Caurāsī-pad with the chāp 'Narvähan'.

The text is taken from L.P. Purohit 1960:1-4. For discussion of the Rādhāvallabh sect and the 'Narvāhan' verses in the Caurās̄i-pad see C.S.J. White 1977 and R. Snell 1991a.
III.2.8 Bihārī̄āl: Satsaī (BS)

Bihārilāl, born at the beginning of the seventeenth century near Gwalior, was a court poet under the patronage of Jaisingh at Amber (the old capital, superseded by Jaipur). He represents the culmination of the various elements which go to make up his ingeniously effective poetry: traditions of gnomic verse inherited from Sanskrit and Prakrit; the immense resources of literary rhetoric from that same source; contexts of courtly life reflecting the sophistications of Mughal and Rajput high culture; and the elaborate narrative and devotional structures of Rādhā-Krṣna bhakti.

Bihārī is first and foremost a love poet, for whom all romantic situations, whether secular, mythic or devotional, provide copy for the poetic imagination. The strict social code which circumscribed a free mixing of the sexes made sweet longing and anguished virah natural poetic subjects, with boundless scope for lovelorn glances, desperate messages and secret trysts. The commentators subject Bihäri's poetry to ever more contrived interpretations (including several probably undreamed of by the poet himself): but the charm of the verses lies rather in the fresh spontaneity of their images, the aptness of their metaphors, and the succinctness of their expression.

The Satsā̄ model, which dates back to Prakrit verse, does not necessarily imply a number of verses fixed absolutely at 700 . The edition followed here, with the modern Hindi prose commentary of Jagannāth Dās 'Prabhākar' (see Concordance, p. 52), has a total of 713 dohās and sorthās. G.A. Grierson's 1896 edition of the text has a useful introduction; B. G. Holland 1975 and K.P. Bahadur 1990 both give a complete translation; for an outline of the language of the text see V. Miltner 1962, and for a list of Perso-

Arabic loanwords in the Satsaī see R.P. Dewhurst 1915. M.S. Randhawa 1966 introduces paintings based on the poems; a miscellany of papers on Bihäri edited by Nagendra (1981) serves only to underline the ineffable quality of the poet's talent.
II.2.9 Jasvant Sim̀h: Bhāṣā-bhūṣan (BhBh)

Jasvant Simh (b. 1626) was maharajah of the great Rajput kingdom of Marwar, with its capital at Jodhpur, which he ruled from 1640. His fortunes were bound up with those of various factions of the imperial Mughal power, and he was particularly closely involved in the struggle for empire among Shahjahan's sons (among whom Aurangzeb was, of course, finally to emerge victorious). J. Tod's colourful account of Jasvant Simh's reign includes the following passage (1902:I, chapter 6):

The life of Jeswunt Sing is one of the most extraordinary in the annals of Rajpootana, and a full narrative of it would afford a perfect and deeply interesting picture of the history and manners of the period. Had his abilities, which were far above mediocrity, been commensurate with his power, credit, and courage, he might, with the concurrent aid of the many powerful enemies of Arungzeb, have overtumed the Moghul throne.
This warrior king, at whose death fifteen queens and concubines committed suttee, was also a scholar of distinction. Braj Bhāṣā texts attributed to him include commentaries on the Bhagavad Gītā; a version, mostly in prose, of the Sanskrit drama Prabodhacandrodaya; discussions on metaphysics, such as the prose Siddhānt-bodh composed in 'question-answer' (praśnottar) format as a debate between student and teacher, and the celebrated work on rhetoric, Bhāṣā-bhūṣan, written in dohās. BhBh is described by G.A. Grierson (1896:23-24) as follows:

The Bhāṣā-bhūṣana deserves its reputation. It is a miracle of compactness. Its author contrives, generally most successfully, to contain the definition of each rhetorical figure, together with an example, within the limits of a single döhā. At the same time, the language is usually remarkably simple, and the style pleasing...
The work is divided into five lectures. The first is merely introductory. The second deals with Heroes and Heroines. Their classification is carried out to a minuteness even greater than that of the [tenth-century] Sanskrit authority on the subject, entitled the Daça-rūpa, or its follower the Sähitya-darpana [fifteenth-century]. The third deals with the various essentials of a poem, - the flavours, the emotions and the various modes of their expression, the essential and enhancing excitants, the accessories and ensuants. Then follows the fourth lecture, the main portion of the work, in which the various rhetorical omaments of sense, the simile, metaphor, and so forth, are defined and illustrated. The fifth lecture deals with verbal omaments, - alliteration and the like. The fourth lecture (on Rhetorical Omaments) is based on, and might almost be called a free translation of, the fifth chapter of a well-known Sanskrit work on Rhetoric, entitled Candräloka, written by Pīyuṣa-varṣa...

The text given here (from V.P.Miśra 1972: see Concordance, p. 52) comprises the first 44 dohās of the fourth 'lecture', framed by the first and fifth 'lectures' in their brief entirety. G.A. Grierson 1896 translates the whole text, with extensive reference to other works on rhetoric (but note that his identification of the historical Jasvant Simh is not correct). The works of the illustrious Keśavdās (K.P. Bahadur 1972) may be compared to BhBh. The Sanskrit tradition of poetics is surveyed in E. Gerow 1977; and individual figures of speech are fully defined and analysed, with examples from both Sanskrit and English (and American) literature, in E. Gerow 1971.

III.2.10 Vṛnd: Nīti-satsaī (NS)

Vṛnd, whose full name was perhaps Vṛndāvan (-dās?), was attached to the Jodhpur court from c. 1661, where his father was a poet at the court of the poet-king Jasvant Simh (9); in 1663 Vrnd moved to Delhi as tutor, or guardian, to Aurangzeb's grandson Azim-ushShan. His duties took him to cities far from the imperial capital, and the Nīti-satsai was composed in Dhaka in 1704, when Azim-us-Shan was subedar of Bengal. He was later employed at the Rajasthan court of Kishengarh, by the father of the poet Nägaridās (13).

The various texts attributed to Vrnnd include a Bārah-māsā, and a Yamak-satsaī exemplifying rhetorical figures; but he is best known for his Nitit-satsaī, a compendium of dohās recounting worldy wisdom. The construction of these couplets is rather more stereotyped than those of, say, Bihäri: almost invariably, the first line voices a contention of some kind, while the second supports it with a concrete illustration drawn from everyday life. The poetic skill lies largely in the aptness of the illustration.

The text is taken from J.R. Celer 1971 (see Concordance, p. 52).

III.2.11 Dev: Aștayām (AY)

The traditionally accepted dates of Dev's life are 1673-1745. Dev, or Devdatt, from Etawah, represents a more decadent phase of the tradition of riti verse than that of his forebear Bihārī, with whom he is frequently compared. The fifteen or so texts attributed to Dev cover a range of subjects from the religious (usually Krṣnaite in context) to nāyikābhed description; he also wrote in praise of some of the patrons under whom he served. The poem Astayām exemplifies the originality which Dev could bring to conventional themes. The daily routine in a Krṣnaite temple follows a cycle of ritual dividing the day into eight 'watches' or $y \bar{a} m$; the minutiae of these observances, and the appropriate mental attitudes to be assumed by the devotee, are described in a genre of sectarian verse called astayām, 'the eight watches'. This genre is the model for Dev's poem, in which he adapts the temple programme to a secular purpose in describing - perhaps with an element of satire - the self-indulgently hedonistic daily routine of a palace nāyikā and her beloved. Each yām occupies three hours, the cycle beginning notionally at 6 a.m., and is sub-divided into eight equal periods called gharī. In Dev's poem, each gharī is described in a doh $\bar{a}$ (which acts as a statement of theme) and a savaiyā or a kavitt (which expands on the narrative and description).

The eight yām describe the following procedures. 1: when the couple arises at dawn, signs of the night's love-making infuriate the heroine's jealous co-wives but delight her sakhīs. 2: she bathes, does pūjā, eats, dresses elaborately in a mirrored hall, meets her husband in an arbour, and goes with him to listen to music. 3: they embrace, play dice, go to a gallery where pictures of viprit-rati (love-making with the female superincumbant) embarrass the heroine, visit an aviary, wear clothes of each other's colour. 4: the heroine resents the time spent with her elders; winning her freedom, putting on new unguents and clothes, she prepares herself for the tryst. 5: she goes to the 'palace of delight' (rangbhavan) and sits with her husband, who begins romancing; the sakhis leave; the couple make love. 6: they talk about the joys of love-making, but his teasing puts her into a fit of jealous pique ( $m \bar{a} n$ ); he appeases her. She weeps at the thought of parting. 7: talking, kissing, telling stories, they finally fall asleep. 8: she tells him that she dreamed he was going abroad; further love-games, including viprit-rati ; seeing the coming dawn, the heroine tricks her husband into thinking it still night, and he sleeps.
Our text is the fourth yām, and is taken from R. Tripāthí 1978. Some discussion on Dev is given in K.B. Jindal 1955:182-88; the astayām convention of Vallabhite temples is outlined in R. Barz 1976:48-49 and A. Ambalal 1987:21-25; its application in the Caitanya sect is described in D.L. Haberman 1988a: 126-29 and 161-63; for details of other astayäm literature see A.W. Entwistle 1987:55-56 and 251.

III.2.12 Raslīn: Ras-prabodh (RP)

Saiyid Gulāmnabī, who assumed the poetic name 'Raslīn', was born in Bilgram (to the north-west of Lucknow), an important centre of Islamic culture and scholarship to which he was himself heir. He is the author of two Braj Bhāṣā texts, both composed in dohās: Ang-darpan (1737), comprising elegant poetic descriptions of the female figure and attire; and Ras-prabodh (1741), a treatise on rhetoric.
The Ras-prabodh begins with the praise of Allah, of the Prophet, and of Husain, from whom, as a 'Saiyid', the poet claims descent (see III.3.3). The text then treats such themes as the rasas and the categories of nāyikā and nāyak, the various sections of the text being headed by Sanskritized editorial rubrics (Braj forms are routinely replaced by their Sanskrit equivalents in all such contexts). A section on the rasa theory of poetics includes the Sat-rtu-varnan included here, this 'description of the six seasons' being included in the category of uddīpan, i.e. the 'excitants' or contributory elements which promote aesthetic sentiment.
The text is taken from S. Pāṇ̣ey 1969:130-133. The conventions of 'seasonal' descriptive verse are discussed in C. Vaudeville 1986.
III.2.13 Nāgarīdās: Arill-pacīsī (AP)
'Nāgaridas' is the poetic name of Sāvant Simih, born in 1699 in a Rajput dynasty whose capital was Kishengarh. Along with the throne of Kishengarh, which was a dependency of the Mughal empire, Sāvant Simh inherited also a family allegiance to the Vallabha sampradāy; portraits of Rādhā and Krṣna in the well-known Kishengarh school of

अलह नाम छबि देत यों ग्रंयन के सिर आइ । ज्यों राजन के मुकुट तें अति सोभा सरसाइ ॥

Allah's name at the head of a work lends it an elegance like the great splendour radiating from a king's crown.

Dhruvdās honours both mentor and deity in his Premāval̄̄ $\overline{1} 1 \bar{l}$ (L.C. Gosvāmī 1971:169):

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { प्रगट प्रेम कौ रूप धरि, श्री हरिबंश उदार । } \\
& \text { श्री राधाबल्लभ लाल कौ प्रगट कियो रस सार ॥ }
\end{aligned}
$$

Taking the form of manifest love, the noble Srī Harivaḿs made manifest the quintessence of beloved Srī Rādhāvallabh.

III.3.2 Colophons

A text is often concluded with some claim to its spiritual or aesthetic efficacy, often linked to a plea for a diligent reading. Dhruvdās closes his Man-śikṣā-līlā (ibid. p. 12) as follows:

> मन शिक्षा के सुनत ही, ढरचौ न नैननि नीर । पाठ भजन ऐसो भयो जैसे पढ़त है कीर ॥

When one hears the 'Soul's Instruction', tears stop flowing from the eyes - if the reading of the text is done in the manner that a parrot recites.

A bold claim is made by Jasvant Simih for his Aparokṣasiddhānt (V.P. Miśra 1972: 151):

\begin{aligned}
& \text { या अपरोछसिधाँत को अरथ धरै मन माँहि । } \\
& \text { छूटे सो संसार तैं फिरि फिरि आवें नाँहि ।। }
\end{aligned}
$$

He who holds the meaning of this Aparokșasiddhānt in his heart escapes from samisāra, and is no longer reborn over and over.

Banārsīdās closes his autobiography with a more general statement of benevolence, linked to a conventional totting up of verse numbers (M. Lath 1981:275):

सब दोहा अरु चौपाई छसै पिचत्तरि मान । कहहिं सुनहिं बांचहिं पढ़हिं तिन सबकौ कल्याण ॥

The dohās and caupāīs total six hundred and seventy-five; good fortune to all who recite, hear, read or study them.

Court poetry often includes a diplomatic reference to a patron, as in the last couplet of Matirām's florid Phūl-mañjarī (K.Miśra and B.Miśra 1964:435):

हुकुम पाइ जहाँगीर कौ नगर आगरे धाम । फूलन की माला करी मति सों कबि मतिराम ॥

On Jahangir's command, while residing in the city of Agra the poet Matirām created this 'garland of flowers' using all his wit.

Tulsīdās ends his Vairāgya-sandīpanī (R. Sukla 1958:II,14) with conventional modesty:

\begin{aligned}
& \text { यह बिराग संदीपनी सुजन सुचित सुनि लेहु । } \\
& \text { अनुचित बचन विचारि के जस सुधारि तस लेहू ॥ }
\end{aligned}
$$

Kind sir, hear this 'Kindler of detachment' sympathetically, and mulling over its solecisms, revise it as you will.

Formulaic apologia of this kind may equally well come at the opening of a text, as in Matirām's rhetorical work Ras-rāj (K. Miśra & B. Miśra 1964:201):

\begin{aligned}
& \text { कवितार्थ जानों नहों कछुक भयो संबोध । } \\
& \text { भूल्यो भ्रम ते जो कछुक सुकबि पढ़ैगे सोध ।। }
\end{aligned}
$$

I know nothing of the poetic muse, save what little I have picked up; the skilled poet, reading this work, will emend it where I have erred.

At the beginning of his Rāj-nīti (1854:4), Lallūlāl takes a similar stance, adopting the metaphor of the narrow world of the well as compared to the breadth of the ocean:

\begin{aligned}
& \text { कवि बासी गृहकूप कौ कथा अपार समंद । } \\
& \text { तैसीय कछु कहत हौं मति है जैसी मंद ॥ }
\end{aligned}
$$

The poet dwells in his well-like house, yet his tale is as vast as the sea;
I have said what little I could, within the limits of my intellect.
Following the text proper, a separate scribal colophon may record the date and circumstances of the copying of the manuscript (and often denying responsibility for the content or state of the text). Such colophons do not appear in printed texts, though a brief Sanskrit phrase including the formula iti, 'finis', may be retained.

III.3.3 Dates and Chronograms

A colophon verse may include the year of composition according to the the Vikramāditya calendar, as in the Rasānand-ililā of Dhruvdās (L.C. Gosvāmī 1971:251):

रसानन्द याकौ नाम कहावै । कहत सुनत आनँद रस पावै । सम्बत सो षोदस पंचासा । वरनत जस ध्रुव जुगल बिलासा।

Reciting or hearing this [poem] called 'Ambrosial joy' yields the joy of ambrosia; in samvat sixteen hundred and fifty Dhruv described the glory of the couple's sport.

A samvat date is converted to A.D. by subtracting 57 (but 56 at the end of the year, i.e. in the dark half of the month Pauṣa, and in the months Māgha and Phālguṇa). The month is often included in the colophon, as in the Ardhakathānak (M. Lath 1981:275):

\begin{aligned}
& \text { सोलह सै अद्णानबै संबत अगहन मास । } \\
& \text { सोमबार तिथि पंचमी सुकल पक्ष परगास ॥ }
\end{aligned}

In samvat sixteen hundred and ninety-eight, in the month of Āgrahāyaṇa, on Monday, the fifth day of the bright fortnight, [this poem] is finished

The year itself may be expressed cryptically in a chronogram. Numerals are expressed symbolically through brief ciphers (whose lexical meaning is not usually significant in the line of verse) such as the following:

0 kha 'sky, infinite';
1 sasi, vidhu 'moon'
2 netra 'eyes';
3 guna 'the constituent elements of the phenominal universe';
4 yuga 'the ages of creation';
5 'indrī 'the senses';
6 rasa 'the flavours' (sweet, sour, salt, bitter, acrid, astringent);
7 vāra 'the days of the week', or sāgara 'the oceans';
8 gaja 'the elephants supporting the cardinal points of the universe'
(There are many variants: for a versified list see Keśavdās, Kavi-priyā II.5-21 (V Miśra 1954:161-62); see also L. Renou & J. Filliozat 1953:II,708.) The numbers yielded by a chronogram are read in reverse order to reveal the year: thus the following from the Prem-vātikā of Raskhān (A. Simh 1956:12) dates the text as samvat 1671 (= AD 1614).

> बिधु सागर रस इंदु सुभ बरस सरस रसखानि । प्रेमबाटिका रुचि रुचिर चिर हिय हरख बखानि ॥

In the auspicious year 'Moon [1], ocean [7], flavour [6], moon [1]', Raskhān joyously extolls the 'Garden of Love', relishable to the taste, ever joyful to the heart.

चौरासी ( तथा ) दो सौ बावन वैष्णवन की वार्ता

गोकुलनाथ / हरिराय

8. सूरदास ( $5 \%$ वैष्णवन की वार्ता)
[ सूरदास] के पद जहाँ तहाँ लोग सीखिक गावन लागे। सो तब एक समय तानसेन ${ }^{1}$ नें एक पद सूरदास कौ सीखिके अकबर बादसाह के आगै गायौ। यह सुनि देसाधिपति अकबर नें कह्यौ जो ऐसे लक्षनबारे भक्तन ${ }^{2}$ सों मिलाप होय तौ कहा कहिये ${ }^{3}$ । सो तानसेन नें कही ${ }^{4}$ जो ${ }^{5}$ जिननें यह कीर्तन कियौ है 6 सो बज में रहत हैं और सूरदासजी उनको * नाम है।

यह सुनि देसाधिपति के मन में आई जो कोई उपाय करिक सूरदास सों मिलिये । पाछे देसाधिपति दिल्ली तें आगरा आयौ। तब अपने हलकारान सों कह्यो जो ब्रज में सूरदासजी श्रीनाथजी के पद गावत हैं सो तिनकी ठीक पारिके मोकों श्रीमथुराजी ${ }^{7}$ में खबर दीजियो और यह बात सूरदास जानैं नाँहीं।

तब उन हलकारान नें श्रीनाथजी द्वार ${ }^{8}$ में आयके खबर काढ़ी। तब सुनी जो सूरदासजी तौ मथुराजी गये हैं । सो तब वे हलकारा श्री मथुरा में आयकै सूरदास कों नजर में राखे, जो या समय यहाँ बैठे हैं। तब उन हलकारान नें देसाधिपति कों खबर करी जो अजी साहब, सूरदासजी तौ मथुराजी में हैं। तब सूरदास कूँ अकबर बादशाह ने दस पाँच मनुष्य बुलायवे कों पठाये। सो सूरदासजी देसाधिपति के पास आये। तब देसाधिपति नें उनकौ ${ }^{9}$ बहीत आदर सन्मान कियौ। पाछ सूरदासजी सों देसाधिपति नें कह्यो जो

[^7]सूरदासजी तुमने विष्नुपद बहौत किये हैं सो तुम मोकों कछु सुनावो । तब सूरदास नें अकबर बादशाह आगै यह पद गायौ। सो पद -

> ॥ राग परज ॥

मन रे, माधव सौं कर प्रीति ।
काम क्रोध मद लोभ मोह तू छाँड़ि सबै बिपरीति $॥^{10}$
यह सुनि देसाधिपति बहौत प्रसन्न भयौ । पाछे देसाधिपति के मन में यह आई जो सूरदासजी की परीच्छा करिके देबूँ । जो भगवान के आस्त्रय होयगौ ${ }^{11}$ तौ ये मेरौ जस गावेगौ नाँहीं। सो यह बिचारि के देसाधिपति नें सूरदास सों कही जो श्री भगवान ${ }^{12}$ नें मोकों राज्य दियो है । सो सगरे गुनीजन मेरौ जस गावत हैं सो तिनकों में अनेक मन में जो इच्छा होय सो माँगि लेहु। सो यह देसाधिपति नें कह्यौ। तब सूरदासजी नें यह पद गायौ। ${ }^{14}$
॥ राग केदारौ ॥

नाहिंन रह्यौ मन में ठौर ${ }^{15}$
नंदनंदन अछत कैसै आनियै उर और ॥ चलत चितवत द्यौस जागत सपन सोवत राति । हृदय तैं वह मदन मूरति छिन न इत उत जाति ॥ कहत कथा अनेक ऊधौ लोक लोभ दिखाय । कहा कहौं चित प्रेम पूरन घट न सिंधु समाय ॥ स्याम गात सरोज आनन ललित अति मृदु हास । सूर ऐसे दरस कों ये मरत लोचन प्यास ॥

[^8]सो यह पद सुनिक देसाधिपति नें अपने मन में विचारचौ जो ये मेरौ जस काहे कों गावेंगे। जो इनकों कछु लैवे कौ लालच होय तौ ये मेरौ जस गावैं। ये तौ परमेश्वर के जन
8. हैं सो ये तौ ईश्वर कौ जस गावेंगे।

सो सूरदासजी या कीर्तन में पिछले चरन में कहे हैं ${ }^{16}$ जो सूर ऐसे दरस कों ये मरत लोचन प्यास ${ }^{17}$ । सो देसाधिपति नें सूरदास सों कह्यौ जो सूरदास तुम्हारे तौ नेत्र हैं नाँहीं ${ }^{18}$ सो प्यासे केसे मरत हैं ? सो यह तुम कहा कहे ? तब सूरदास नें कही जो या बात की तुमकों कहा खबर है। जो ये लोचन तौ सबके हैं 19 परंतु भगगान के दरसन की प्यास काहू 8. कों है। जो श्री भगवान के दरसन के जो प्यासे नेत्र हैं सो तौ सदा भगवान के पास ही रहत हैं। सो स्वरूपानंद कौ रसपान छिन छिन में करत हैं और सदा प्यासे मरत हैं।

यह सुनि अकबर बादशाह नें कही जो इनके नेत्र तो परमेश्वर के पास हैं। सो परमेश्वर कों देखत हैं, और कों देखत नाँहीं। तब बादशाह नें सूरदास के समाधान की इच्छा कीनी । दोय चारि गाँम तथा द्रव्य बहौत दैन लाग्यौ सो सूरदास नें कछू नाँहों लियौ। तब अकबर
к० बादसाह सूरदासजी सों कहे जो बाबा साहिब कछू तौ मोकों आजा करिये । तब सूरदासजी नें कही जो आज पाछ हमकों कबहू फेर मत बुलाइयो और मोसों कबहू मिलियो मत ${ }^{20 ।}$

> सो अकबर बादसाह विवेकी हती ${ }^{21}$ । सो काहे तें। जो ये योगभष्ट तें 22 म्लेच्छ भयो है। सो पहले जनम में यह बालममफंद 23 बहचारी हतौ सो एक दिन यह बिना छानें दूध पान कियो तामें एक गाय को रोम पेट में गयो। सो ता अपराध तें यह म्लेच्छ भयो है।

सो सूरदास कों दंडवत करिके समाधान करिके बिदा किये।
${ }^{16}$ süradãasjij...kahe har: an example of a usage common in VV, where a transitive verb in a perfective tense shows concord with its logical subject (here honorific pl. süradāasaji). See 1.5 .5 .
17 'Sür, these eyes thirst for such a vision': Akbar relates this line to Sür's own blindness.
18 tumhäre tau netra hai nă̆h': verb precedes negative for emphasis - 'you don't even have any eyes!'. An earlier part of the värtă describes Sürdās as being borm 'without even the shapes of eyes'.
${ }^{19}$ ye locana ...kähūū kõ hai : 'everybody has these [ordinary] eyes, but few thirst for a vision of God'.
${ }^{20}$ mata bulaiyo... miliyo mata: note the increased assertiveness in the re-ordering of negative and verb in the second imperative. The forthright and rather gruff manner of Sürdās as described here is very much of a piece with his characterization throughout the värtă.
${ }^{21}$ so akabara bādasāha viveki hatau: the commentator finds it exrraordinary that Akbar, a Muslim, should be sufficiently discriminating to appreciate Sür's qualities, so he tries to explain the anomaly away.
22 yogabhrasta $t$ Et: 'through a corruption of religious practice', i.e. through a ritual fault.
${ }^{23}$ bälamukanda ( $={ }^{\circ}$ mukunda) : a name of the child K K!ṣna (with a pun on bäla as 'hair'?).

और सूरदासजी के पास एक बजवासी कौ लरिका हतौ सो सब काम काज सूरदासजी को करती। ताकौ नाम गोपाल ${ }^{24}$ हतौ। सो एक दिन सूरदासजी महाप्रसाद 25 लैन कों
द० बेंे तब वा गोपाल सों सूरदासजी कहे जो मोकूँ तू लोटी में जल भर दीजो । तब गोपाल ब्रजवासी नें कह्यो जो तुम महाप्रसाद लैन कों बैठो जो मैं जल भरि देऊँगो। सो यह कहिके गोपाल ती गोबर लैन कों गयो। सो तहाँ दोय चार वैष्णव हते सो तिनसों बात करन लाग्यौ। तब सूरदास कों जल दैनौ भूल गयौ। और सूरदासजी तौ महाप्रसाद लैन बेठे सो गरे में कौर अटक्यौ। तब बाँये हाय सों लोटा इत उत देखन लागे ${ }^{26}$ सो पायौ नाँहीं। तब गरे में कौर अटक्यौ सो बोल्यौ न जाय। तब सूरदास व्याकुल भये । सो इतने में शीनाथजी ${ }^{27}$ सूरदासजी के पास आयके अपनी झारी ${ }^{28}$ धरि आये। सूरदासजी नें झारी में तें जल पीयौ।

तब गोपाल ब्रजवासी कों सुधि आई जो सूरदासजी कों मैं जल नाँहीं भरि आयो। सो दौरचौ आयौ। इतने में सूरदास महाप्रसाद लैके आये। तब गोपाल बजवासी नें आयके
७. सूरदास सों कह्यौ जो सूरदासजी तुम महाप्रसाद लै उठे सो तुमने जल कहाँ तें पीयौ। जो में तौ गोबर लैन गयौ हतौ सो वेष्णव के संग बात करत में भूलि गयौ। तासों अब मैं दौरचौ आयौ हूँ। तब सूरदास ने ब्रजवासी सों कहचौ जो तैंने गोपाल नाम काहे कों धरायौ। जो गोपाल ती एक श्रीनाथजी हैं। सो तासों आज मेरी रक्षा करी। नातर 29 गरे में ऐसौ कौर अटक्यौ हतौ सो जल बिना बोल निकसे नाँहों। तब मैं व्याकुल भयौ तब हाथ में जल की झारी आई सो मैं जल पान कियौ। तासों मेंनें जान्यौ ${ }^{30}$ जो तैनें धरचौ होयगौ। और अब तू कहत है जो मैं नाँहीं हती। सो तातें मंदिर वारौ गोपाल होयगौ ${ }^{31}$ । जो देख तौ झारी कैसी है।

[^9]तब गोपाल बजवासी जहाँ सूरदासजी महाप्रसाद लिए हते तहाँ आयके देखै तो सीने की झारी है ${ }^{32}$ । सो उठाय के गोपाल सूरदासजी के पास आयके कह्यौ जो यह झारी तो
5. मंदिर की है। सो तब सूरदास नें वा गोपाल बजवासी सों कह्यो जो तैंने बहौत बुरौ काम कियो जो श्रीठाकुरजी ${ }^{33}$ कों इतनौ स्रम करवायौ। जो मेरे लिएँ झारी लेके श्रीठाकुरजी कों आनी परचौ। सो या प्रकार सूरदासजी नें गोपाल सों कहयौ जो यह झारी तू जतन सों राखियो। और जब श्री गुसाई जी ${ }^{34}$ आपु पौढिके उैं तब उनकों सौंप आइयो। तब गोपाल नें झारी लैकै श्रीगुसाई जी पास आय दंडौत कर आगै राखी। तब श्रीगुसाई जी
5x आपु कहे यह झारी तेरे पास कैसै आई। जो यह झारी तो श्रीगोवर्धनधर की है। तब गोपाल नें श्री गुसाई जी सों बिनती कीनी जो महाराज यह अपराध मोसों परचौ है। पाछ सब बात कही।

तब यह बात सुनिक श्रीगुसाई जी आप तत्काल स्तान करिक ${ }^{35}$ झारी कों मँजवाय दूसरौ वस्त्र लपेटिकै मंदिर में बेगि ही झारी लैके पधारे। पाछ श्री गोवर्धनधर कूँ जल पान
ع० करायके कहें जो आज तौ सूरदास की बड़ी रक्षा कीनी । सो तुम बिन कौन वैष्णव की रक्षा करै। तब ध्रीनाथजी नें कही जो सूरदास के गरे में कौर अटक्यौ सो व्याकुल भये तासों झारी धरि आयौ।

सो काहे तें। जो सूरदास व्याकुल भये सो मैं ही व्याकुल भयो। जो भगवदीय मेरौ स्वस्प है।
ता पाछे उत्थापन के किंवाड़ खोले। ${ }^{37}$ सो सूरदासजी आयके उत्थापन के दरसन किये। सो उत्थापन समै कौ भोग श्री गुसाई जी श्रीनाथजी कों धरि सूरदास के पास आयकै कहे जो आज गोपाल नें तिहारे ऊपर बड़ी कृपा करी है। तब सूरदासजी नें कह्यो जो महाराज यह सब आपकी कृषा है। नाहिं तौ श्रीनाथजी मो सरीखे पतितन कों ${ }^{38}$ कहा जानें। जो सब श्री आचार्यजी की कानि तें अंगीकार करत हैं। तब श्री गुसाई जी आपु कहे

[^10]१०० जो तुम बड़े भगवदीय हौ । जो भगवदीय बिना ऐसी दैन्यता कहाँ मिले। सो सूरदास जी श्री आचार्य जी के ऐसे कृपापात्र भगवदीय हते ${ }^{39}$ ।

२. कुष्णदास ( $5 \%$ वैष्णवन की वार्ता)

और एक समय श्रीगोवर्द्धननाथजी के मन्दिर में सामग्री चहियत हती, सो तब कृष्णदास गाड़ा लिवाय आपु रथ पर असवार होयके ${ }^{40}$ श्रीगोवर्द्धन सों आगरे आये। सो जब आगरे के बजार में गये, तहां एक वेस्या अपनी छोरी कों नृत्य सिखावत हती। सो वह छोरी परम सुन्दर बरस बारह की हती, कण्ठ हू परम सुन्दर हतो। सो गान नृत्य में चतुर बहोत हती। सो वह वेस्या ख्याल टप्पा गावत हती। सो वा छोरी को गान कृष्णदास के कान में परयो हतो । सो कृष्णदास के मन में बैठि गयो, सो प्रसन्न होय गये । तब कृष्णदास ने तहां अपनो रथ ठाड़ो कियो । सो भीड़ सरकायके वे छोरी को रूप देखे, सो तहाँ गान सुनिके मोहित होय गये ।

तहाँ यह संदेह होय, जो कृष्णदास श्रीआचार्यजी महाप्रभुन ${ }^{41}$ के कृपापात्र सेवक वेस्या के गान पर मोहित क्यों भये। जो ये तो श्रीठाकुरजी के ऊपर मोहित हैं। ... ${ }^{42}$ ये कृष्णदास वेस्या के ऊपर क्यों रीझे। यह सन्देह होय तहाँ कहत हैं जो यहाँ कारन और है ${ }^{43}$ । जो यह वेस्या की छोरी लीला संबंधी दैवी जीव ललिताजी की सखी हैं ${ }^{44}$, सो लीला में इनको नाम बहुभाषिनी है। सो एक दिन ललिताजी श्री ठाकुरजी के लिये सामम्री करत हती तब ललिताजी ने बहुभाषिनी सों कही जो तू मिश्री पीसि के ले आउ। सो बहुभाषिनी मिश्री को डबरा भरिके चली। सो दूसरी सखी सों बात करते करते छांटा उडयो, सो मिश्री में परयो । सो बहुभाषिनी कों खबरि नाहीं । पाछे मिश्री को डबरा लेके ललिताजी के पास आई, तब ललिताजी परम चतुर हती, सो जानि गई। पाछे बहुभाषिनी सों कही जो यह सामग्री छुइ गई, ${ }^{45}$ जो तेरे मुख तें

${ }^{60}$ rāga pūrvī: the räga name, which appears in its semi-tatsama spelling in the previous line, has been Sanskritized in this more formal context of a verse heading. (Note too that numerals designate the couplet, and not the individual line, as the basic unit of the stanza.) The stanza itself can be translated:

My mind is ensnared in the beauty of the Mountain-holder;
it has gone over to his lovely limbs of thrice-bent pose, and remains caught up there.
The dark rain-cloud [Krșna) is of blue colour: my mind will turm and stray nowhere else
${ }^{61}$ paravata ke ūpara: i.e. to the top of Govardhan hill, where the Srināth temple was situated. Cf. 161 nīce le jāyake 'taking them down again'
${ }^{62}$ A brief paragraph of Bhāv-prakäs commentary, explaining that many devotees were regularly 'accepted' by Srināthji at this particular time, has been excised herc.
63 gāvata 2: the numeral indicates a repeat of the preceding word, thus gãvata gāvata.

३. रसखान (२०२ वैष्णवन की वार्ता)

सो वह रसखान दिल्ली में रहत हतो । सो वह एक साहुकार के बेटा के ऊपर बोहोत आसक्त भयो। सो वाकों अहर्निस देखे। और वह छोरा कछू खातो तो वाकी जूंठनि लेई। और पानी पीवतो तो हू वाकौ झूठो पीवे। सो ऐसो आसक्त भयो। सो रसखान की जाति के जो हते ${ }^{69}$ सो रसखान के ऊपर बोहोत ईर्षा करते और कहते जो तू हिन्दु कौ जूठौ क्यों खात है। अब तू काफर भयो है। तब रसखान ने कही जो हों जैसो हूं ऐसो हैं ${ }^{70}$ परि अब तुम मोसों कछु बोलोगे तो मैं ठौर मारूंगो । तब इनसों सब डरपत रहते । सो ऐसो आसक्त हंतो । तब ऐसें करत बहोत दिन बीते।

तब बहोरि एक दिन दो वैष्णव आपस में बतरात हुते । सो कहत हुते जो भाई देखो
३७ห. आसक्ति होंई तो ऐसी होंई ${ }^{71}$ जैसी या रसखान की वा बनिया के छोरा पर है। सो वाके पाछें डोलत है । लोक-लाज, जाति डर सब कछू छूटयो । ऐसी प्रभुन में होंई तो कहा

\%. तेने मेरे पर माथो क्यों धुनायो है। तब वा वैष्णव ने डरपि के कही जो मेनें तोकों देखि माथो नहीं धुनायो है। हम तो आपुस में बतरात हुते। तब रसखान ने कही जो तू साँच कहि मैं तोकों छोरि देउंगो। नहीं तो ठौर मारूंगो। तब ऐसे कहि के खडग उठाय लियो। तब वह वेष्णव डरप्यो। और वासों कह्यो जो तेरो मन वा छोरा में आसक्त है तैसो मन प्रभुन में लगावे तो तेरो काम होंइ जाय ${ }^{74}$ । तब रसखान ने कही जो प्रभु तू कौन ?5\% सों कहत है। मैं तो कछू जानत नाहीं। ${ }^{75}$ तब वा वैष्णव ने कही जो प्रभु वासों कहियत है जिन कौ यह सारो जगत विभूति है। तब रसखान ने कही जो यह सगरौ उन की विभूति है तो मैं उनकों कैसे जानों ${ }^{76}$ । तब वा वैष्णव की पाग में श्रीनाथजी की चित्र हतो। तामें मुकुट काछनी कौ सिंगार हतो ${ }^{77}$ । सो काढ़ि के रसखान कों दिखायो । तब चित्र देखत ही रसखान कौ मन फिरि गयो। और आंखिनि में जल कौ प्रवाह चल्यो । सो वा छोरा में
38. स्नेह हतो सो तो मिटि गयो।

यह कहि यह जनाए जो आसक्ति भगवद्धमर्म है तातें लौकिक में होंई तोऊ अंत में जीव कों प्रभुन की ओर ले जात है ${ }^{78}$ तातें आसक्ति साँची चाहिए। सो या रसखान की आसक्ति वा छोरा में सांची हती तो वाकौ मन प्रभु ने फेरचो। सो वा छोरा में तें स्नंह मिटि के प्रभुन में भयो।
तब वा वेष्णव सों कही जो यह महबूब 79 कहां रहत है। तब वा वेष्णव ने कही यह महबूब तो ब्रज में रहत है। तब रसखान ने कही जो यह मूरति हम कों देउ। मति कहुं भूलि

२०० सिंघपोरि पैं पोरिया ब्रजबासी हतो । सो वाने रसखानि कों धक्का मारि के बाहिर काढि दीनो। ${ }^{83}$ तब रसखान गोविंदकुंड पें जाय बैठयो। और मन में बिचारी जो जितने हिंदु के देवालय में गयो हतो सो कहूँ मोकों काहूने धक्का मारचो नाहीं। और यहां मोकों धक्का दिए। सो ऐसे जानिये जो जहां ऐसे महबूब रहत हैं तहां ऐसी करड़ी चौकी रहत होगी। सो ऐसें बिचारि के रसखान गोबिंदकुंड ऊपर जाय बैठयो। और श्रीनाथजी के मंदिर सों
230 टकटकी लगाइ दीनी। और मुख सों ऐसें कह्यो करे ${ }^{84}$ जो या घर में महबूब रहत हैं। तिनके दरसन किए बिना कहुँ न जाउंगो। सो ऐसें निश्रय करि के बैठचो रह्यो। भूख प्यास की कछू सूधि नाहीं रही।

सो ऐसें बेंे बेठे दिन दोइ होइ गए। फेरि तीसरे दिन राजभोग आर्ति होय चुकी । अनोसर होय चुके। तब श्रीनाथजी मन में बिचारे जो रसखान कों तो कछु देहानुसंधान ${ }^{85}$

1 I salute the lotus feet of Hari, the king, through whose mercy the lame may cross a mountain, the blind may all things see; the deaf hear, the dumb speak again, the pauper go with a canopy held above his head; Sürdās' lord is composed of compassion, again and again I salute his feet.

2 Give up everything, and worship Nandkumār; through other worship you achieve nothing, nor are the cares of the world removed. In all the lives in which you have taken birth, you amassed a great burden of sin; the sharp axe of Hari's name is capable of cutting that away.
Veda, Purāna, Bhāgavata, Gitā - this doctrine is the essence of all of them: nothing but the ferry of Hari's feet will get you across the ocean of worldliness. Knowing this in your heart, worship him this very moment, the days slip by in vain; having found this chance, Sūr, profit from it - it is rare when wandering the world.

3 Now this alone is my heart's pleasure:
I shall not leave Vṭndāvan, Syām and Syā̄mā's royal domain.
I have wandered much, seeing lesser abodes - transient and grievous;
[but now] Sūr has embraced the inner truth of undivided and supreme bliss.
4 Lord, save me at this time;
I am sunk in a sea of worldliness, O Murāri, ocean of pity!
The waters of illusion are very deep, and ripple with waves of greed;
Anangga the crocodile seizes me and takes me down into the fathomless water.
The fish of the senses nibble at my body, a bundle of $\sin$ is a weight on my head; nowhere can I set my feet, entangled in the waterweeds of infatuation.
Most turbulent are the winds of anger, vanity, pride and longing; wife and son do not let me look toward the boat of the Name.
I am worn out, half-way across, distressed and afflicted: hear me, root of mercy:
Syām, seize this arm, and pull Sūr out onto the bank of Braj!
bhaje : the perf.part. of bhaj;, used nominally.
kätana : an inf. used as a verbal noun, 'for the cutting of'.
purāna bhăgavata: The Bhägavata is separated out from the other Purạ̄as because of its elevated status in Vaisnavism.
phiri sarisära : i.e. wandering through a succession of rebirths in the world.
grāha: a crocodile or sea-monster (also called makara, magara), a symbol of Kāmdev (called Anainga, incorporeal', because Siva destroyed his body in anger at being aroused with desire for Pärvatü). suta tiya : i.e. worldly domestic ties.

मेरो मन मतिहीन गुसाई।
सब सुख निधि पद कमल छाँड़ि, स्रम करत स्वान की नाई ॥ फिरत बृथा भाजन अवलोकत, सूनें सदन अजान । तिहिं लालच कबहूँ कैसैं हूँ, तृप्ति न पावत प्रान ॥ कौर कौर कारन कुबुद्धि जड़, किते सहत अपमान । जहँं जहँँ जात तहीं बहिं ग्रासत अस्म लकुट पद-न्रान ॥ तुम सर्वश सबै बिधि पूरन, अखिल भुवन निज नाथ । तिन्हें छाँड़ि यह सूर महा सठ, भ्रमत भमनि कैं साथ ॥ $\times$ ॥

5 My mind is devoid of understanding, O lord forsaking your lotus feet, treasury of all joys, it toils like a dog.
It wanders uselessly looking for pots [to lick] in an empty house, unknowing; for that greed the soul could never, in any way, find satisfaction.
For the sake of each and every morsel the stupid dolt endures so many insults; wherever it goes, stones, sticks and shoes terrorize it.
You are omniscient, complete in every way, eternal lord of all the world, forsaking whom this Sūr is a great fool, wandering in the company of his delusions.

6 Hari, I am the king-sinner of all sinners;
there is no other to equal me: great infatuation is my homeland. Seated on the throne of aspiration I have erected a canopy of pride above my head; the herald of my great infamy has called out and all have heeded my command. My two ministers are lust and anger, each has his own way;
dubiety and discord subsist night and day, creating discord.
Greed is my steward, my attendants are of infatuation, my doorkeepers vanity; my seat is aged egoism, illusion holds sway.
The handmaidens of my desires dance service upon me, taking not a moment's rest; joining the servants of indecorum they inform against me.
Fancies are my horses, pride my rutting elephant, untruth and folly my chariot and charioteer;
My mind is my courier, restlessness my archer, an evil mind is ever my messenger. The lord of hell has become a fortress-holder, he keeps the door closed against me; with me is an army of varied sort - the limitless sins that I have committed. The world censures and mocks me, heralds on the road sing my praises; obstinacy, tyranny, and iniquity, Sūr, constantly play a fanfare at my gate.

7 Hari, I am the prince of all the wicked
I am full of calumny and censure and have ever trumpeted this in the world.
Craving is my country and desires are my noble warriors, my senses are my sword; Lust is my minister for giving perverse counsel, anger is ever my gatekeeper. I have mounted the elephant of vanity, all-conquering, greed's canopy above my head; my army is the company of the false - such an overlord am I.
The heralds, infatuation and illusion, sing my praises, bards my limitless faults; Sür has made firm the fort of sin, shutting tight the door.

[^13]अब मैं नाच्यो बहुत गुपाल।
काम क्रोध को पहिंरि चोलना, कंठ विषय की माल ॥ महामोह के नूपूर बाजत, निंदा सब्द रसाल । भ्रम भोयौ मन भयो पखावज, चलत असंगत चाल ॥ तृष्ना नाद करति घट भीतर, नाना बिधि दै ताल । माया को कटि फेंटा बाँधयौ, लोभ तिलक दियो भाल ॥ कोटिक कला काछि दिखराई, जल थल सुध नहिं काल । सूरदास की सबै अबिद्या दूरि करौ नँदलाल ॥ 5 ॥

जैसैं राखहु तैसैं रहौं।
जानत हौ दुख सुख सब जन के, मुख करि कहा कहौं ॥ कबहुँक भोजन लहौं कृपानिधि, कबहुँक भूख सहों । कबहुँक चढ़ौं तुरंग महा गज, कबहुक भार बहों ॥ कमल नयन घनस्याम मनोहर, अनुचर भयौ रहौं । सूरदास प्रभु भक्त कृपानिधि, तुम्हरे चरन गहौं ॥ & ॥

भक्त जमुने सुगम अगम औरें।

प्रात जो न्हात अघ जात ताके सकल, ताहि जमहू रहत हाथ जोरें ॥ अनुभवी जानही बिना अनुभव कहा, प्रिया जाकौ नहीं चित्त चोरै। प्रेम के सिंधु कौ मर्म जान्यौ नहीं, सूर कहि कहा भयौ देह बोरें ॥९०॥

भीतर तै बाहर लौं आवत।
घर आँगन अति चलत सुगम भए देहरि अँटकावत ॥ गिरि गिरि परत जात नहिं उलँघी, अति स्रम होत न धावत। अहुँठ पैग बसुधा सब कीनौ, धाम अवधि बिरमावत ॥ मनहीं मन बलबीर कहत हैं, ऐसे रंग बनावत । सूरदास प्रभु अगनित महिमा भगतनि कें मन भावत ॥॥॥
जसुमति लै पलिका पौढ़ावति ।
मेरौ आजु अतिहिं बिरझानौ, यह कहि कहि मधुरें सुर गावति ॥ पौढ़ि गई हरऐं करि आपुन, अंग मोरि तब हरि जँभुआने । कर सौं ठोंकि सुतहिं दुलरावति, चटपटाइ बेंे अतुराने ॥ पौढ़ौ लाल कथा इक कहिहौं, अति मीठी स्रवननि कौं प्यारी । यह सुनि सूर स्याम मन हरषे, पौढ़ि गए हैंसि देत हुँकारी ॥३२॥

8 Now I have danced enough, Gopāl, wearing a tunic of lust and anger, a necklace of sensuality at my throat.
The anklets of grand delusion jingle with the sweet sound of rebuke;
my mind, engrossed in error, has become a drum and goes with incoherent beat.
Desire resounds within my body, giving rhythms of various kinds;
I have tied on the waist-band of illusion and put a tilak of greed on my brow.
I have acquired millions of skills and shown them off, heedless of place or time: remove all Sūrdās' ignorance, o Nandlāl.

9 As you maintain me, so shall I remain;
you know the sorrows and joys of all people, what can I say? Sometimes I shall take food, ocean of mercy, sometimes I shall suffer hunger; sometimes I shall ride a horse or a great elephant, sometimes I shall bear burdens. I have become, and remain, a follower of the lotus-eyed one, the captivating Ghansyām; lord of Sūrdās, ocean of mercy for the devotee, I grasp your feet.

10 O Yamuna! Accessible to the devotee, inaccessible to others;
he who bathes [in your waters] at dawn is cleansed of all sins, and even Yama stands before him with hands joined.
Only the experienced will comprehend - what is there without experience? He whose mind the beloved has not stolen has not known the secret of the ocean of love: what matter, Sūr, if his [mere] body is immersed?

11 Out of the house he comes;
house and courtyard have become so easy for walking, [but] the threshold trips him. He keeps falling, it can't be crossed; it is such hard work, and he can't run [over it]; In three and a half steps he covered all the world, but the house boundary stops him. Balbir says to himself, 'What a performance he makes of it!';
the incalculable greatness of Sūrdās' lord pleases the minds of his devotees.
12 Yasodā takes [her son] and lays him in the cradle; repeating 'Today my boy was very bad-tempered', she sings in a very sweet tone. She lay herself down gently, then Hari stretched his limbs and yawned; poking him with her hand she cossets her boy; he sits up, restless and disturbed. 'Lie down, Lāl, I'll tell you a story - a very sweet one you'll love to hear!'
Hearing this, Sūr's Syām was delighted in his mind, and lay down smiling with a moan of approval.
ghata : from the primary meaning 'pot, jar' derive the two senses 'body' and 'drum' intended here. mukha kari : lit. 'with [my] mouth'.
yamahū : Yama, regent of death, is the brother of Yamunā.
The bāl-ilīà poems begin here.
The line is deficient by two mātrās.
ahưtha paiga : the 'three and a half steps' which Viṣnu took in his dwarf incarnation. sravanani kaũ pyärī: lit. 'dear to the ears'.

13 'Listen son, I'll tell you a favourite story'; joy grew in the mind of the lotus-eyed, the jewel of the wise moaning his approval.
'There was a King Daśrath in the clan of Raghu; to him were born four sons; first amongst them was the one called Räma, Janak's daughter his fine lady.
Adhering to his father's word he gave up the monarchy, and with his younger brother and wife went wandering in the forest;
the lotus-eyed one, most noble, ran after a golden deer.
Rāvan abducted Sìtā...' - hearing this, Nandanandan shook off sleep, and calling 'My bow! My bow! Lakṣman, give it to me!', Sūr's lord jumped up, his mother in great confusion.

14 Syām feeds in the lap of Nanda;
he eats some, he drops some to the ground, Nanda's wife beholding his beauty Various cooked foods of pulse and flour, countless delicacies of varied kinds: he throws! He eats! He takes in his hand! The bowls of curd are his favourite He tosses into his mouth sugarcandy, curd and butter mixed in his hand, rich in splendour;
he feeds himself and he pops some into Nanda's mouth, his splendour past telling. The joy in which Nanda and Yasodā delight, is not to be found in the three worlds; after eating, Nanda drank a sip of water, and Sür begs for the leftovers.

15 Hari made his first butter-theft;
fulfilling the desire of the gopis' minds, he ran off down the lanes of Braj. In his mind Hari thinks, 'I'll go to each and every home in Braj;
I have taken birth in Gokul for enjoyment, I'll eat butter in everyone's house! Yaśodā knows me in child's form - [but] I'll enjoy pleasure with the gopis!' Sūrdās' lord says affectionately, 'these are my Braj folk'.

16 Hari looked, and went back to the house of the cowherd; then he thought up a ruse in his mind, and crossed over the back way. An empty house, no-one anywhere about - as though it were his own kingdom; taking the pots, he opens, closes, looking for curd and butter.
The soured milk, put out at night to set, fell into Syam's hands;
he takes it and eats it all alone, no companion with him.
Hearing a noise, the young woman came into the house and saw Nandkumār; continually she gazed on Sür's Syäm in the dark house.

13 Yasodā, only dimly aware of Krṣna's true identity, tells him the Rāmāyan story; he becomes spontaneously involved in it because of his shared identity with Rāma.
kamala naina: 'lotus-eyed' (here $K_{r s ̣ n ̣ a) ~ a n t i c i p a t e s ~ t h e ~ s y n o n y m o u s ~} 13.6$ rājiva locana (here Rāma). täta bacana lagi : i.e. honouring the terms of a boon promised by Daśrath to Bharat's mother Kaikeyī, who insisted that Bharat take the throne and Räma be exiled.
kaniyā : this -iyā ending sets up a rhyme (nasalized in the remainder of the stanza) which has to be more or less contrived in all subsequent lines except 4, which has a regular f.pl.
kahata na baniyã: ' cannot be told' [MSH kahte nahí bantī].
sabakar: 'at everyone's place' [MSH sabke (yahã)].
yāhī̀ kau räja : a poetic irony, all of creation being part of Krṣna's 'kingdom'. Cf. 17.5.

17 'Syām, what is your will as you roam about?
When asked, you hide your face and won't give a straight reply.
I came and found you alone in the house, your hand in the curd-pot; who will you blame this time? There's no-one with you!'
'I thought this was my own house, because of that mistake I came in;
I saw an ant in the milk and I reached down with my hand to pull it out.'
Hearing his sweet words and seeing the beauty of his face, the gopi turned and smiled:
'Sūr's Syām, you're very clever, but I've seen through your game!'.
18 Yasodā, how long can I put up with it?
How can the daily loss of milk and curd be tolerated?
You come and see the deed of this son of yours;
he eats the curd, feeds it to the boys, and flees, breaking the pots!
I had strained the butter and put it in a corner of my house;
he noticed it, that son of yours, and went and took it.
Realizing that the cowherd had come back home, he wasn't at all alarmed Sūr's S'yām made up this reply: 'I was pulling out an ant with my hand!'.

19 When did he ever go stealing butter?
Who knows about your sidelong glances - my lotus-eyed one is just so-big!
You constantly trick him, call him into the house, take him in your arms and hug him to your hard breasts;
you parade about showing the nail-marks on your chest - has Kānha become so artful, and you so innocent?
You come here every day on the pretext of scolding him, gazing at him like a cakorī watching the moon;
your mind's ensnared in love, milkmaid, and the heart's affection cannot be broken.
20 What can I tell you of Hari's qualities?
Hear, Yaśodā, what revels he got up to just now in my house with me!
I was churning the curds in my house when he went in there just like that!
He said to me 'Listen to what I say'; I listened and smiled.
He grabbed my arm, seized and tore my blouse, and took me into an embrace;
I can't tell you how alarmed I was, open my heart and see.
He ate my butter and affronted me thoroughly - this is your son's ploy - in front of you, Sūrdās' lord shrinks and becomes all small!
17 A gopi addresses Krṣna.
17.1 cähata: not a ptc. but a f. noun, 'liking, desire'.
18.3 apane ya bālaka kī karanī jau: jau (jo) here picks up and emphasizes karanī, to which it relates.

19 Yasodā addresses a gopi who has accused Krṣna of butter theft.
19.2 itanaka so: 'little, next-to-nothing' [MSH itnā-sā].
19.4 känha catura bhae : Yaśodā sarcastically mocks the gopi's pretence that she is the innocent victim of känha catura bhae : Yaśodā sarcastically mocks the gopi's pretence that she is the innocent victim Krṣna's amorous advances.
19.5 jyaũ caṁda cakoñ: Yasodā is sarcastic and mocking - 'Your eyes are out like organ-stops!'.

21 Why, Kānha, do you go to anyone else's house?
They are all brazen with pride at their cows' milk, they do not speak nicely.
Whatever you fancy, why don't you just ask me for it, son?
As I hear the nectar of speech from your mouth, I feel bliss throughout my body.
What has come over these gopis - they come every morning pretending to scold you; Sūr: why do they insist on blaming you, even at home you don't eat butter!

22 Syăm went into the milkmaids' empty house, he ate the butter, poured out all the milk, broke the pots and smashed them to bits. One big earthen jar, ages old, he reduced to ten pieces; sprinkling the sleeping boys with earth, he went off shrieking with laughter.
The milkmaid came at that moment and caught the absconding Hari;
she saw all the pots in the house broken, and the curds and yoghurt spilt.
She seized his two arms, took him firmly and went before Yasodā:
(Sūr:) 'Who could live here now? Only by leaving Braj can one's honour survive!'.
23 'Yasodā, you are very mean, my friend;
you have much milk and curd, given by God, but you keep it hidden from your son. You don't have a host of children - there is only young Kanhāī; and he wanders from house to house, stealing butter and eating it.
In old age, through accomplished past virtues, you received a great treasure indeed:
[yet] even in his food and drink do you resort to cunning?'
'Hear the crafty words of the clever woman', said Yasodā to Nand:
'On the pretext of a theft she came to see Sūr's Syām!'.
$24 \quad$ He broke my pots and ran away!
Taking some thousand boys with him, he wanders dancing in the narrow lane. No-one can walk the path, he runs and snatches away the milk;
quite unbashful, he plays a game like Holi, clapping, laughing, looking away It's your lad I speak of, he has bound the whole of Braj in a thread of love; casting a spell he leans over our heads, and snatches whatever appeals.
I'd put up with all he eats himself, but he breaks the pot-string and feeds the others; restrain your son Yasodā, for now he's breaking the drawstring on my blouse!

21 Yaśodā addresses Krṣna, ironically unaware of his involvement with the gopis.
21.2 mukha sãbhäri bol- : 'to speak with mouth restrained', i.e. inoffensively.
22.7 dou bhuja : a favourite irony of Sūr's, referring to the two arms of Krṣna who, as Viṣnu, appears in a four-armed (caturbhuj) form.
23.1 tar: an irregular use of the agentive pr. in nominative case
23.2 bidhi kao dīnau: 'given by God', the ptc. used nominally [MSH vidhi kā diyā (huā)]
24.2 larikā sahasa eka sãga līnhe: eka gives the sense 'about' - sahasa eka, 'a thousand or so' (rather than reading as eka sãga 'together'). Cf. 37.5 bălaka sãga liyar.
24.4 phāga sī : [f. for keli or līl̄̄̄ (?), understood] i.e. the decadent games of Holi, in which social conventions are thrown to the wind and liquid substances (here, milk) are thrown over passers-by.
24.7-8 sikaharay tori...torata colī bãda dori : first he breaks the string net in which the butter-pots hang, then he progresses to breaking the string which supports other pitcher-like vessels.

25 'Mother I didn't eat the butter!
On a whim, these friends joined forces and smeared my face.
See for yourself, the pot is in a string net, put hanging up high;
what I say is, my hands are small, how could I have got it?'
Wiping the curd from his face, he tried a trick, hiding the pot behind his back;
Yaśodā threw away her stick, and smiling, hugged Syām close.
The joy of his childish sport charmed her heart, showing devotion's splendour; Sūrdās, even Siva and Brahma did not attain this joy of Yasodā's.

26 Yasodā tied Syām to the mortar:
she left Kṛ̣na right out in the open, and went about her household tasks.
Even as she churned the curd she muttered something, cursing and taking his name:
'He wanders from house to house stealing butter, but there are delicacies at home.
He beats the boys of Braj and runs away - off with you too, Balrām.'
And the women of Braj watch Sūr's Syām, tied to the mortar.
27 His mother sings in praise of the sleeping Syām;
'Today my one went grazing the cows' - repeating this she delights her mind.
'Through what merit or penance did I receive such a beautiful child?'
In constant delight she offers to the gods, $S \bar{u} r$, a garland of flowers.
28 Krṣṇa sounded his flute:
behold the full moon of this sweet night on Yamuna's bank!
Hearing that sound, all the cowherds' young womenfolk became aroused; the ornaments on their bodies put on crooked, they were quite beside themselves Sixteen thousand of them went to Hari, abandoning love of sons and husbands; one was stopped and held back by her husband - she went without her body. To her Hari gave the state of salvation with a glance from the corner of his eye; Sūr, adore Govind thus, breaking the bond of worldly infatuation.

29 May this couple dwell in my eyes:
beautiful Syām, lotus-petal-eyed, and with him, Vrṣabhānu's daughter.
His peacock crown, his crocodile-shaped earrings, his flowing yellow sash: lord of Sürdās - with my small intellect, how can I describe your appearance?
26.3 dahyau: i.e. dahi + emphatic -u.
26.3 mukha tay: lit. 'from her mouth', a pleonasm of a kind common with verbs of speech.
26.3 lai nāma: ironically suggesting the usual devotional sense of 'taking the name of God'
26.4 sata-rasa : ‘[food] of all six flavours' - i.e. sweet, sour, salt, bitter, acrid, astringent.
28.4 soraha sahasa : the traditional number of Krsna's wives in the Dwarka period of his life, here Soraha sahasa : the traditional transposed to the rāsa context.
28.6-8 The story of the gopi prevented by her husband from attending the rāsa dance is an important sub The story of the gopi prevented by her husband from attending the rāsa dance is an important sub plot in the Bhăgavata Purāna, where it represents the merit of complete abandonment in the cause of phakti.

30 This flute, friend, has stolen everything - all Hari stole was our clothes; she's stolen our hearts, stolen our minds' power; gone is our modesty, family duty and fortitude!
Ever since, we have become restless, roaming about here, agitated in great distress Sūrdās' lord is cruel, and cruel is she, knowing not the pain in another's heart.

31 The flute makes Hari dance a dance!
Even so, this bamboo flute appeals to Nandanandan.
He stands subjugated thus, afraid to say anything;
she disrespectfully issues him with orders, quite unabashed
When she knows he has become subservient, she looks at him and makes him bend his neck; lying on his lip, she makes his trembling blossom-hands press the feet of her holes She looks at us with constant anger and makes his nostrils flare; and whenever Sūr's Šyām is pleased, she makes him shake his head.

32 He comes to Braj wearing the guise of a fine dancer; with peacock crown and fish-shaped earrings, a curly lock finding splendour on his face Arched brow and such restless eyes - I pursue a simile for this beauty:
seeing a bow a pair of wagtails is alarmed, desperate to fly but afraid of flying!
His unequalled lips fill the flute with melody as he picks up a tune in Gaurī mode;
the herd of cows and the cowherd boys sing together and greatly augment their joy With golden belt at his waist, and yellow tunic, he dances, singing in mellow tone; looking at the sweetness of Syām's every limb delights the people of Braj.

33 Mohan comes, grazing the cows; peacock-crown on his head, [wearing] a garland of wild flowers, a stick in his hand, smeared in dust from the cows' hooves.
His waist-girdle resounds with the sound of bells, the anklets at his feet bring a sound as he walks;
Ghansyām is amidst the circle of cowherds, his yellow garb shaming the lightning
His cowherd friends come singing praises, amidst them are Syām and Balrām, their splendour spread around.
Sūrdās' lord has destroyed the demons; coming to Braj he increases our hearts' joy curāyau...cīra : an allusion to Krṣna's theft of the gopis' clothes as they bathed in the Yamuna. cori...curāyau : a clear demonstration of the semantic equivalence of the verbs cor- and curā-. The image is of the imperious flute, luxuriating on the soft bed of Krṣna's lower lip, making his fingers massage the note-apertures which represent her 'feet' sissa ḍlāvata: shaking of the head indicates aesthetic pleasure in an Indian audience.
khamjana : the wagtail represents the eyes because of the flickering or 'wagging' motion of its tail.

34 Seeing Hari's body, the similes are ashamed;
one hides in the water, one in the woods, some few find refuge in the heavens. Seeing his face, the moon went to the sky, [as did] the lightning on seeing the brilliance of his teeth;
fish and lotus, for fear of his hands, feet and eyes, made their abode in the water. Seeing his arms, great serpents were put to shame, and hurried to enter their holes; seeing his waist, the lion felt fear, and stayed hidden in the forests.
Giving comparisons to his sacred body abuses the poets' descriptions; Sūrdās: you put us to shame, taking our name.

35 Night and day our eyes rain tears;
It has been a constant rainy season with us since Syām went away
The kohl in our eyes stays not night or day, our hands and cheeks are blackened; the cloth of our blouses never dries, channels stream between our breasts.
Our bodies are all awash with tears, not for a moment is our suffering removed;
Sūrdās' lord, examine this: why did you forget Gokul?
36 'In which country dwells this "one without qualities"?
Explain and tell us, bee, on oath - we ask in good faith, we are not joking!
Who is his father? Who his mother? Who is his wife, who his maidservant?
What is his colour, how does he dress, in what sentiment does he take delight? If you tell us false, you will reap the rewards of your deed!'
Hearing this, the crazy one fell silent and stayed that way, Sūr, all his wit destroyed.
37 What is this story you keep contriving?
He gets up at dawn to play, Uddhava, and eats butter in every house.
The one of whom you speak to us, is remote from us;
here, near at hand is Yasodā's boy, the enlivening herb for our souls.
Taking the boys with him he steals the curds; eating, feeding them he roams; Sūr: Why do you bend your head low? Why don't you speak now?
$34.7 \quad$ baranata and deta are used nominally here.
34.8 hamärau : refers to the (personified) similes listed in the earlier lines.
n this poem, and in the following four, the gopis address Uddhava (Braj U dhau), whom Krssna sent as an emissary to the gopis when he left Braj for Mathura. Uddhava's mission was to console the gopis with advaita philosophy, according to which they should feel no separation from him because in reality the soul is not distinct from God. This teaching was received with scorn by the gopis, who compared his dry wisdom with the sweet delight of saguna bhakti. The gopis' conquest of Uddhava is complete in this vernacular treatment of the theme, but the BhP version is more circumspect and does not allow such a complete victory to the saguna argument.
madhukara : 'honey-maker, bee'. The gopis associate Uddhava with a bee who flies past as they speak to him - the bee being an image of fickleness, flying from flower to flower - and they transfer its epithet to him. Such songs are thus known as bhramar git, 'bee songs'

38 There is no room left in my heart;
while Nandanandan remains there, how can another be brought in?
while Nandanandan remains there, how can another be brought in?
Walking, looking, awake in the day and dreaming in slumber at night that intoxicating image strays from my heart not for a single moment.
You tell all kinds of stories, Uddhava, with a show of worldly greed; what should I do? - my heart is full of love, and a pot cannot hold an ocean.
That dark body and lotus face, the charming, gentle-faced laugh:
for the sake of a vision of these, Sür, my eyes die of thirst.
39 Uddhava, what is done with this 'yoga'?
Is it worn, or is it wrapped around one? Or is it rather eaten or drunk?
Is it then some beautiful toy, or some fine ornament?
Our Nandanandan is the one we want, Mohan is the life of our soul.
What you say is that Hari is without qualities, perpetual, the Vedic 'not this' is his way;
he is manifest as a charming mass of beauty - why abandon faith in him?
He has left the cattle station to graze the cows, he is coming back quite soon;
he, Sūr, is our support, playing the sweet flute.
$40 \quad$ Uddhava, go and say just this:
'Without you, these most doleful cows have grown very thin of body.
Their two eyes rain masses of tears, as they call out to you by name;
wherever you did the cow-milking, they sniff that very place.
They fall swooning at every moment, wretched in great distress, as though, Sūr, they were fishes drawn from the water and cast down.'
41 Rukminī, come! Let us go to my birthplace; though your dominion abides in Dwarka, it is not equal to Mathura. Grazing the cows on the Yamuna's bank, giving its ambrosial water to drink the bower sport, and arms placed around shoulders in the trees' cool shade. A delectable, fragrant, gentle, sandal-scented breeze, wandering in the groves the sport that subsists in holy Vṛndāvan is not to be found in the three worlds. The cattle, the cowherds, Nand and Yaśodā cannot be removed from my mind; perform the service of the lord of Sürdās, crown jewel of the wise!
abahí hai phiri āvata: in this deliberately ironic reference (Krṣna actually does not return to the gopis abce he has left for Mathura) the present tense has future reference [MSH abhī āte har].
While ruling in Dwarka, Krsna tells his queen of the joys of his previous days in Braj; the stanza asserts the superiority of Braj bhakti.
41.5 malayānila (malaya + anila) : the breeze which blows from the mountain range called malaya - the Western Ghats - always associated in poetry with the sandal trees which grow there.

Mīrā

in the pure water of Ganges and Yamuna the body is cooled.
Krṣna plays the flute and sings, taking Balbīr with him; his peacock crown and yellow sash shine, his earrings sparkle with diamonds. Mīrā's head is at the lotus feet of her lord, the courtly Giridhar.

2 Dwell in my eyes, Nandalāl!
Your enchanting form, your dusky face, your eyes made wide!
The flute adorns your nectarous lip, on your heart a jewelled necklace.
With tiny bells are your hips resplendent, your anklets have a sweet sound;
Mīrā's lord is Gopāl, a giver of joy to the pious, loving to his devotees.
3 Hari, you remove the pain of mankind;
you protected Draupadī's honour, and immediately her clothing extended. For the sake of a devotee you took incarnation in 'man-lion' form:
you slew Hiranyakaśipu, who held not his courage.
You saved the drowning elephant and brought him out of the water; the maidservant Mīrā has her head at the lotus feet of beloved Giridhar.

4 As for me, I am dyed in the colour of the dark one;
decked out in ornament, tying anklets to my feet, forsaking public shame I danced. Gone was wrong understanding as I took holy company, cast in devotee's form; ever singing Hari's qualities night and day I escaped from the serpent of death.
Without him the whole world seems bitter, all other talk banal;
Mīrā has tested sweet devotion to lord Giridharläl.
5 Mirā tied bells to her feet and danced;
I have myself become the slavegirl of my Nārāyan.
People say Mīrā has gone mad, kinsmen call her a destroyer of family;
Rānājīi sent a poisoned cup, Mīrā laughed as she drank it.
Mīrā has readily found her lord, the courtly Giridhar, the eternal one.
1.1/2 gamgā jamanā: an unlikely collocation, given the entirely Braj-based context of the poem. Some texts (e.g. B.D. Tivārī 1974:148) read vā jamunā, or equivalent.
4.1 rācī: this usage conflates the two senses of rāc--, 'to be dyed', 'to be enamoured' (CDIAL 10583 and 10584 rajyate).
4.3 sẫcī: alternatively adj. 'true' - - 'became true [found truth] in the form of a devotee'.
5.4 viṣa kā pyāāā rānāājī bhejyā: an incident from the hagiography of Mïrā in which her husband's halfbrother, from a rival faction in the royal house of Mewar, tried to poison Mirā. See Alston 1980:3.

6 Yogi, do not go! Do not go! Do not go! I fall at your feet, I am your handmaiden. The very path of loving devotion is unique, show me the way.
I shall make a pyre of aloe and sandalwood - light it with your own hand;
When I am burnt to a heap of ashes, smear them onto your body
Says Mïrā, O lord, courtly Giridhar, merge your flame with mine.

7 See, friends, Hari has hardened his heart;
he spoke of returning, but still he has not come: he left, promising time and again. Eating, drinking, sense, mind - all are forgotten; how have I stayed alive? You it was who forgot your own words, mine was the mind you stole; says Mīrā, o lord, courtly Giridhar, without you my heart is breaking.

8 My one is Giridhar Gopāl, there is no other;
he whose head bears a peacock crown, he alone is my lord.
I have abandoned family honour, what can anyone do?
Sitting with pious folk I have done away with worldly shame.
Constantly irrigating it with tears I have sown the creeper of love;
now the creeper has spread and the fruit of bliss has grown Seeing devotion I was gladdened, seeing the world, I wept;
[says] the handmaiden Mïrā - dear Giridhar, save me now!

9 Without a vision of you my eyes have begun suffering since you left, my lord, I have found no comfort.
Hearing his voice my heart trembles at those sweet, sweet words;
to whom can I tell the tale of my lovesickness, it has sliced me with a saw's motion.
I have no rest, watching from the roof for Hari, and the night has become a six-month;
Mīra's lord, when will you meet me, to remove sorrow and to bring joy?

10 I have found a fondness for the feet of the guru; nothing but his feet pleases, all the world is an illusion of dreams.
The ocean of worldliness has all dried up, I have no concern with crossings; Mïrā's lord is the courtly Giridhar, her hopes lie with the refuge of that guru's feet.
6.1 The two pādas of this first line (tek) are transposed, and one metrically superfluous mata jāadded.

11 O, the arrow shot by the satguru has passed right through me;
the spear of separation has struck within my heart, my body is in torment. My mind can never move here or there, the fetters of love are cast about it; none but my dear beloved knows my pain, no-one else.
What should I do? I have no control, friend, tears pour from my two eyes; says Mīrā, without meeting you, lord, my soul holds no composure.

12 Friend, I love Vṛndāvan; in every house there is worship of the deity and tulsi, and audience with Govind. Pure waters flow in the Yamuna, food is of milk and curd;
He adorns a jewelled throne, wearing a tulsi crown.
Rādhikā wanders among the groves, hearing the sound of the flute; without adoration for Mirä's lord, the courtly Giridhar, man is dull.

13 Giridhārī plays Holi; flute, mouth-harp and wondrous drum resound; with him are the young Braj maidens. Mohan the sportive one scatters sandalwood and saffron with his own hand; taking handful after handful, Lāl hurls the red powder on everyone all around With the dashing and handsome young Kānha is Rādhā, his heart's beloved; they sing a lovely Holi song there, marking time with soft hand-clapping. With the Holi that the dark lover plays, the joy of Braj grows greatly; Mïrā's lord is the courtly Giridhar, Mohanlāl, the sportive one.

14 Drink the nectar of Rām's name, O mind, drink the nectar of Rām's name; quit bad company, and sitting with the pious listen ever to accounts of Hari. Wash away from your mind lust, anger, intoxication, greed and infatuation; Mīrā's lord is the courtly dancer, drench yourself in the colour of his love.
11.4 kai jānậ...aura na jānai: 'either my dear beloved knows...[or] there is nobody who knows'. mero: read as two short syllables for metre.
11.6 miliyã: $=$ perf.ptc
mhăne: (a Rajasthani form), obl.pl. mhã̃ + objective ppn. ne (cf. Braj mohi, MSH mujhe). tulasī: the sacred basil plant, revered as an aspect of Viṣnu and thus grown in Vaiṣnava temples etc. camga: the name of various instruments, including (locally) a small drum, and (across Northern India and the Middle East) the jew's harp.
cahũ: 'in all four [directions]'.
daãri: the stem form dẫri (used in comp. with de-) with final vowel lengthened for rhyme chaila and its doublet chabilo (both < Skt. chavi-) differ slightly in sense: chaila 'dandy, wanton (with an emphasis on a wilful projection of a foppish appearance) vs. chabillo 'handsome, elegant' (with less implication of contrivance) bihărí: repeating a rhyme-word (cf. line 3) is typical of the casual manner of composition in Mīrā's poetry.

if I am a bird, then let me make my abode in the boughs of a kadamba tree on Yamuna's bank.
2 Dust from cows' hooves adorns his brow, his forest garland is luxuriant; ahead, the cows; behind, the cowherds sing sweet melodies.
As sweet as the sweet sound of his flute is his crooked glance and slow, gentle smile; on the river's bank near the kadamba tree - climb to the rooftop and spy the fluttering of his yellow sash;
the eyes rain a nectar and extinguish the body's burning delighting the soul, he comes - Raskhān!

3 I shall place his peacock-feather [crown] on my head,
I shall wear his necklace of seeds around my neck;
wrapping on his yellow sash and taking his stick
I shall roam the woods with the cattle and cowherds.
He is my beloved, that Raskhān - at your command I shall imitate him in every way;
[but] this flute of the flute-player's, which was held to his lips I shall not hold to my lips

4 The milk that you want as you seize my dress, well sir, take it, won't you - how much milk will you drink?
The butter you ask for on the pretext of tasting it, eat it, won't you - how much butter will you eat?
I know what is in your mind, Raskhān, so why should you beat about the bush?
The taste that you seek, pretending to want milk - that taste, Kānha-jū, you will not get at all!

The poem considers various possible future births, each maintaining some connexion with Krṣna mili : this seems semantically superfluous here (though metrically correct).

5 I sought God in the songs of the Purānas, listening to the Vedic hymns with fourfold zeal;
[yet] never did I ever see or hear how was his form, or of what kind his nature.
Calling and searching I admitted defeat, neither men nor women could show me Raskhān:

- [but] see him concealed in the hut in the grove, sitting massaging the feet of Rādhikā!

Just now she went to the cowshed to milk the cow, and came back crazy, just throwing down the milk-pail in her hand; some say she's shamming, some that she's struck dumb, some that she's afraid some say she's dead or that she has lost the use of her eyes.
Mother-in-law takes a vow, sister-in-law hurries to call the exorcist, they run about, thinking it as it were the mischief of the gods;
[but] the sakhis laugh, understanding her swooning - somewhere she has seen the smile of that herdsman, Raskhān!

Today, sister, a cowherd's wife went crazy and could not control her body at all;
her mother tired not from worshipping the gods, her mother-in-law called constantly for the exorcist.
Thus has Raskhān girded the whole of Braj, no-one at all could think of a remedy:
nobody will take from Känha's hand our enemy, that little flute, and burn it up.

8 Lāl came holding red powder in his hand when on a deserted road he met a young lady;
there and then Raskhān embraced her to his heart, sister, and had the pleasure he desired with that helpless one.
With sari torn the tender girl drew back, with bodice rent she slipped away, drenched in (love's) colour;
Smearing the powder on her cheeks, he ravished her in embrace and took his leave.
caugune cāyana: an allusion to the four books of the Veda. The rhyme-word initiates a sequence of nouns all obl. pl. but with different case: cäyana instrumental (a rather contrived pl., as is the next); subhāyana genitive ('of what natures?'); lugāyana ergative; pāyana accusative gati harī akhiyāna ki: 'the movement of the eyes is lost'.
sāsa vrata thānai : the taking of vows, promising particular service to a deity in return for intercession, is traditionally the duty of older women in the family.
kauna ko kauna : the repetition is rhetorical, 'who, but who?' - i.e. nobody at all gulāla: this reading (Bhäṭi 1977:275) preferred to gupāla (Amir Simih 1947:31) adhinī: this reading (Bhāṭ̄ 1977:275) preferred to ajīnī (Amir Simih 1947:31).

9 He whom Sesca, Ganeś, Siva, Sūrya and Indra praise ceaselessly; whom the holy Veda describes as 'without beginning or end, indivisible, impenetrable, not to be divided'; whom the likes of Nārad, Suka and Vyās, though they labour in vain, fail finally to fathom;

- that same one, the cowherds' daughters set a-dancing for a cup of buttermilk!

Well, recently, abandoning all worldly shame the two of them have learnt all the ways of furthering their love; within a day or two, Raskhān, this news will spread around how far, wise one, can you hide the moon with your hands?
Today, friend, right by the Yamuna's bank I saw the turning and smiling of each to the other;
both fell at the other's feet, both bestowed a blessing, he has forgotten the cows, and she the carrying of the water-pot!

Kānha has fallen under the spell of the flute who will love us now, friend?
Night and day she remains attached to him, who can bear the rival wives' anguish?
She who has charmed the charmer of the heart will always make us burn [with jealousy], Raskhān; come, let us all run away together, friend, for now the flute will reside in Braj.

Filled with what magic is the little flute drenched in joy, that Hari played today; whosoever heard her tune, they at that very moment bade farewell to modest shame.
They hover at every moment at Nanda's door — should I call them maidens? - these knowing girls; in this Braj district what woman is there whom Raskhān has not dazzled with love?

13 You did not look [in judgement] on the deeds of Draupadi and the harlot, the elephant, the vulture, and Ajāmil;
how was Gautam's wife saved
how did you remove Prahlād's burden of suffering?
Why should one worry, Raskhān - what can poor Yama do the moment when you accept a saviour like the butter-taster?

The cowherd of Braj yesterday with the gopis from all around set going a Holi dance and created a stir; singing a rakish tune he delighted their hearts, with natural ease he aroused the whole village.
Squirting his syringe he drenched the other damsel with unctuous love, with dancing eyes he set my body a-dancing; mother-in-law and simple sister-in-law he has dancing in the lane, he soaked my fair rivals, he filled me with shyness.

With your wealth you may intimidate Kuver, with your beauty you have defied Kämdev; through constant enjoyment you may tantalize Indra, and through yoga you may hold the Ganges on your head; what of all this, Raskhān, [even] if you relish the rapture of beatitude on your tongue, if with all your heart, you are not dyed in the colour of him who remains dyed in the colour of queen Rādhikā!

Covered with dust, Syām jū is most resplendent decorated as he is with a lovely topknot on his head; playing and eating he roams round the courtyard clad in a yellow dhoti, the anklets on his feet resounding.
Seeing that beauty, Raskhān, Kāmdev sacrifices myriads of his arts;
and great is the fortune of that crow, friend, who has taken the bread and butter from Hari's hand

The poem praises $K_{\Gamma}$ ṣna/Viṣnu for distributing grace without judging the recipient. nihāro: probably to be read as perfective ptc., i.e. $=$ nihāryau.
MSH: us ksañ, jis ksan makkhan-cakhneväle jaisā rakhnevālā rakhā jāe.
macäi go: in each line the verb comprises stem + perfective ptc. of $j \bar{a}$-, and can be interpreted either as a macäi go: in each line the verb comprises stem + perfective ptc. of ja-, and can be interpreted compound (MSH macā gayã etc.) or as abs. + finite verb ('created a stir and left'). Cf. 21.4. bãkī: two senses apply - both 'crooked' (i.e. the twists and turns of the tāna up and down the musical scale) and 'rakish' (the characteristic quality of Krṣna's wanton lovemaking).
neha : both 'love, affection' and 'fluid, unguent'. The latter sense is imbued with sexual symbolism.
nacäi go : this reading (Bhāṭ̄ 1977:274) preferred to bacäi go (Amir Simih 1947:32) bairina sacäi gorī: the phrase is not wholly clear, but sacäi is perhaps for sicäi aise bhae to kahā : 'if such things have happened, so what?'. (Cf. MSH kyā huā, 'so what?'.)

17 Playing his flute and singing a herding-song he came with the cowherds amidst the cows; through his flute he sounded my own name on a pretext of [calling] the fine cowherd boys.
O friend! Hearing it, for fear of my mother-in-law, even with sister-in-law nearby I could not catch my breath;
how should I act, Raskhān, I have no wellbeing, no peace have I, for the stealer of hearts has stolen it.

One's sight cannot settle on those houses of gold, ever with the brightness of rows of lamps, rubies and gems;
How further can I praise your supremacy now, a crowd of gatekeepers and kings never leave your door.
Bathing in the Ganges and giving away pearls with abandon, reciting the Veda a score of times, meditating from morning:
despite all this, what is man, Raskhān, if he loves not with all his heart the one who wears the yellow sash.
Why go to the gardens, beloved sitting at home I shall plant a garden to show you;
my heels are like pomegranate flowers, my two arms I shall bend over you like champak branches.
In my breasts [see] succulent limes, and opening my veil I shall give you grapes to taste;
with cups of the nectar of my loins, Raskhān, I shall give freely of the passion of my blooms!

Clinging limb to limb, the two, Raskhān, remain embracing in the shade of a tree; meeting in fearless union, steeped in Kāmdev's bright joy, she has her arms round her lover's neck.
Their words are as it were Kāmdev's fine house of love they go inside and plunder its passion;
he grasps her drawstring (her breasts are golden jugs!) - and the loving lady says to the lover, 'No sir! No!'.
su gvālana : prefixed $s u$-is perhaps primarily for metre. Cf. 20.3 su aina and 22.1 su gäina. säsa ke träsana: the mother-in-law perceives what the flute's call implies. (The pl. number of trāsana is another metrical convenience.)
băga dikhäü : cf. the idiom noted by Platts (1930:123), 'sabz bāg dikhānā, 'To excite desire and expectation by deceitful promises (lit. 'to exhibit a blooming garden, as by legerdemain')'.
19.4 dhägana : perhaps < *dhākka- 'back, waist' (CDIAL 5582), among whose derivatives are regional forms n $-g$ and the sense 'hip'. But etymology and sense are both uncertain: cf. Bhātu's easier reading tâgana legs' (1977:301). Misra (1953:40) assimilates to daãga and glosses chuhārä ('date-palm') casake : if not from casaka 'chalice', then casakā 'taste for, relish' (CDIAL 4727 casati 'eats'?). milāi : the reading from Misra (1953:40) and Bhâṭi (1977:298); Amir Simha has miläpa. nibì: a conventional play on 'drawstring' and 'capital, treasure' (as her priceless golden breasts).

The glance is hard to pull away from $K_{r}$ ṣna, to see whom it constantly flies. The image is a conventiona one, in which the 'bow' of the arched eyebrows shoots the 'arrow' of a glance.
lakuṭ̄ aru kāmariyā : the cowherd's equipment, identifying Krșna Gopāl as the subject of the poem. Some commentators regard the nostalgic context as parallel to that of SR 22, with K $\upharpoonright$ ṣna as speaker thü pura: i.e. the 'three worlds' - earth, heaven and hell.
âthahũ ... navo: these are aggregatives [MSH ãthõ, navõ].

1 I salute the destroyer of obstacles, lord of success and attainment, imparter of pure intellect, child of the one whose head bears a moon.
2 With steadfast mind I rehearse the name of Nandakumār the foundation of life for Vrṣabhānu's daughter.
3 Worship the lord of animate and inanimate, the sun god, giver of pleasure to afflicted folk, a very saviour.
4 I meditate upon the deliverer from grief, Girijā's lord [Siva], maintainer of the skilful, three-eyed, having the Ganges on his head.

5 I meditate upon [Hanumān], the breaker of adversity, son of the wind, destroyer of the grove of the wicked demon, and dear to Raghubir.
6 Again and again I salute the lotus feet of my preceptor, through whose brilliance the darkness of my mind is removed 7 The clouds pour rain on all sides in unceasing torrent, the month of Sāvan comes, O Nandakumār.

8 Still Ghanaśyām has not remembered us and come, friend; some woman has settled somewhere and kept him.
9 How long will patience remain in my heart, my friend? Even in Sāvan he does not come - where is Balbir?
10 Clouds gather all around, lightning flashes: lover and beloved swing together in Sāvan's Tij festival.

11 A day without seeing Manmohan has no charm; I shall not forget his qualities, friend - just bring us together!

1 The first stanza is the traditional encomium to Ganes, who as the remover of obstacles is invoked at the outset of any new undertaking: see III.3.1. Ganes is the son of Siva, whose head is adorned with a crescent moon. The eulogy sets a pattern for 1-6, praising respectively Gane§, Krsna, Sūrya, Siva, Hanumān, and the guru.
bināsana... prakāsana: 'destroyer', ‘illuminator' — see 1.5.11.
Following the opening eulogistic references, the main substance of the poem begins here. The advent of the rains signifies the end of the season when travel is possible, and thus the beginning of a period of virah when the absent lover can no longer be expected to return.
ghanasyāma : Krṣna's epithet 'dark rain-cloud' is ironic in the context of his absence in Śrāvan.
sajanī: a vocative (synonymous with the ubiquitous sakhř) which frequ ntly recurs at this point in the line: cf. 9.1, 11.2, 12.2, 13.2, etc.
10.2 sāvana tija: the swing festival celebrated on the third day of the dark half of the month of Srāvan.

अति अद्भुत छबि सागर मोहन गात । देखत ही सखि बृढ़त दृग जलजात ॥ २₹ ॥

19 Saying these things has no effect, though one may repeat them a thousand times; Nandakumār talks laughingly with one and all.
What trickery are you trying, Uddhav, with your show of conviction? Not even in my dreams can Mohan the lover be forgotten.
21 Day and night I am surrounded by the affliction of separation, Alas, Uddhav, for those words that Krsna spoke!

22 Like a human body amongst the eighty-four lakhs [of births], this natural love is rare in the world.
Most wondrous is the ocean of beauty of Mohan's body; immediately on seeing it, my friend, the lotuses of my eyes are immersed.
13.1 tribidha: 'threefold, triple', hence 'of three constituent qualities'; formulaic use of the adj. refers to the wind as being 'gentle, cool and fragrant'.
marutavā: -vā is a definite nominal suff. used in Eastern dialects such as Avadhī, but also borrowed in Braj; cf. 14.1 sãdesavā, 25.1 mitavā rahyau na jāya : the impersonal passive expressing incapacity — cf. MSH (mujhse) rahā nahí jàatā cavāva: the 'condemnation' is the criticism of Krṣna for breaking his promise of a return to Braj. The abrupt change of tone intends no irony, but is simply part of the rhetoric of bhakti. Cf. RB 32. maribaũ : inf. as verbal noun, the subject of passive lakhiyata, lit. 'a dying is being seen'. jīvana mūri : may be interpreted also as 'restorative herb', with a (metaphorical) medical sense. In this and the following stanza, the gopis address the advaitin Uddhav, whose mission is to teach them to perceive Krsna as omnipresent. Cf. SS $36-40$, and see Index of Epithets.
84 lakhs is the traditional reckoning of births to be lived through in a cycle of samsāra; to gain a human birth represents a rare achievement, attained only with difficulty.
The 'lotus eyes' have a natural place in the 'ocean' of Krṣa's beauty; but the gopis' tears of course contribute to the sense of drowning.

बिन देखें कल नाहिन, यह अखियाँन । पल पल कटत कलप सों, अहो सुजान ॥ २४ ॥

24 Without seeing him there is no repose for these eyes; each and every moment passes like an age, o friend.
25 Since the lover departed, say, how can there be peace? My heart is ever filled with sighs, with tears my eyes.
26 Hari went away with a glance, my friend, smiling slightly; since then the fire of attachment has been rising in flames.
27 Men and women worship the Holi fire together, my friend; without Hari, it is as though a conflagration were lit in my heart.
Since Mohan left, I have lost my senses; my life lies on my eyelids and my eyes upon the road 29 Since Mohan left, I have neither hunger no thirst; at every moment my mighty sighs expand.
30 They pierce my inner heart and impale my soul, poison-like, supreme amongst all, these eye-arrows
31 Constantly my mind stands on tiptoe, ever watching the door ever since Nandakumār left, my friend.
32 O my heart, night and day worship lord Balbir who removes people's pain without appraising them.
33 All say 'Be strong of heart!', now Hari's gone away a stupid barren woman knows not the pain of childbirth.
34 Seeing Mohan's flute, I thought it a kinsman; it seems sweet at first, but it pierces the soul.
35 Leave off idle chatter and worship Narhari Nārāyan, who became manifest from a pillar and saved Prahlād.
24.2 sujāna: another vocative, parallel in usage to sakhī, sajanī etc.
25.2 An effective but relatively rare use of the alañkāra called dīpaka ('zeugma' - see BhBh 44 and note), a figure of speech in which a single phrase (here the verb phrase rahata bharyau) completes two distinct subjects (here hiya and naina ). The construction of the barvai line is fully exploited here, the second clause (äsuna naina) being completely contained by the second short päda. Cf. 28.2, another such figure, in which the second phrase drga maga mähz similarly occupies the second päda. to deepen the suffering of the virahini.
bina jăce : an essential characteristic of divine grace, often stressed in bhakti verse, is that it is bestowed unconditionally and without appraisal of the recipient. Cf. SR 13.
34.1 bamisi...bamsī : a conventional play on the two senses of the word as 'flute' and 'kinsman' respectively. The gopi thinks the flute a kinsman because it too is a beloved of Krṣna, but later perceives it to be a rival for his attentions. Cf. SS 30-31, SR 11, etc.

I bow my head to Sri Harivamśs and relate the story of Narvāhan; $\leqslant_{\text {rī }}$ Harivaḿs, a gem among votaries in the rāsa dance, fulfils the hopes of followers.
Narvāhan, a resident of Bhaigãv, was a potentate of far and wide whose command none rejected: any who did so, he attacked and killed.
He subjugated all of the Braj country, great monarchs feared him;
he rejected the declarations of the emperor, and pillaged travellers at will.
If anyone attacked him, he would grant no quarter but beat them off.
At some time he came to holy Vrindaban, and had an audience with Hit Harivaḿs.
Discussion was going on between him and Navaldās, and Narvāhan heard all their talk; when through darsan his mind was purified, he took the dust of the feet of Harivams.
Hearing the words [of Harivams'] he felt remorse and regretted his past deeds; he began, 'I have come for refuge' and related his whole story.
'Accept me now, lord, put your hand on my head and remove my perversity.' He spoke without guile, and then Hit Harivamśs initiated him and adopted him. Immediately he gave up his banditry, and his fortune flourished in fullness; [Harivam's] showed him the mystery of the beloved domain, and Narvāhan forthwith fixed his mind upon it.
He began to perform service there with full attention, never satiated in sentiment. A grand merchant came that way, his ship heavily laden with costly goods.
Paying no levy he opposed everyone, fighting much with mortar and cannon. He [Narvāhan] too began demanding the levy, but how would he listen, greed-blinded?

Sri harivaṁsa: Hit Harivamis, c. 1502-52, the bhakta whose devotion for Rādhā and for Krṣna as 'lover of Rādhā' (rādhāvallabh), as expressed in his Braj and Sanskrit poetry, is the theological basis of the Rādhāvallabh sampradāy. 'Hit' (hita) signifies 'divine love' in Rādhāvallabhī doctrine, and is often adopted by Rādhāvallabhis as part of their name: cf. lines 8 and 14 .
4 kou na tạrai : the historical present tense ('none resists') has not been followed in the translation.
6 dagarau mārai : 'attacks [on] the road', i.e., robs travelling merchants etc. - cf. 15 băta māribau.
9 navala: Navaldās, a devout disciple of Harivam̌s from Raibari. His biography elsewhere in the RAM navala: Navaldās, a devout disciple of Harivams from Raibari. His biography elsewhere in the RAM 10 pada raja lai : 'took the foot-dust [to his forehead]', an act of submission and veneration.

16 ista dhāma: Vrindaban, the location of Rädhā and Krṣna's lila and of the temple of Rādhävallabh.
17 lā̈/aghā̄: caupā̀ rhymes often require original short vowels to be lengthened - thus lāa is for abs. läi, aghä̀ for abs. or present-subjunctive aghäi.

He was an irreligious Jain, and fought furiously with Hari's devotees; seven hundred guns had he with him; on both sides continuous fighting began.
[Narvāhan's] servants looted and brought in offering three lakhs in coin, and property; they bound [the Jain] and brought him to the village, confiscating all guns and weapons. They put all the freight in a store, cast an iron ring round his neck and fetters on his feet; as much wealth again they demanded, [only] then might he be released from this place.
Many days passed with him tied up; 'If he does not send for money I'll kill him outright' Sitting in his court [Narvāhan] so resolved, and this was overheard by a housemaid.
Comely, young and handsome was that merchant, and the maid thrilled to behold him. When pity came to the maid's heart she told him straightaway what she had heard.
'The king will kill you tomorrow! There is no way for you to live!'.
'You rescue me and save my life - I shall acknowledge your favour over many births.'
'I shall tell you one mantra and through that I shall save your life;
you will get back all your property, and will go to your home with honour.
'Wear a tilak on your brow and a bead necklace, and hear from me the sweet name:
"Rādhāvallabh, Srī Harivaḿś" - thinking on this, Yama's noose of sin is cut.
Call it out constantly in the coming night - say it thus, in polished fashion; hearing it, he [Narvāhan] himself will come and cut your fetters and converse with you. 'Then say to him, "I am his [Harivams''] servant; he alone is the boatman to ferry us across the world". '
Having thus instructed him she returned to the palace and resumed her work without letting anyone know.
He trusted her and accepted what she had said, and that night perfomed that very cry; hearing the cry Narvāhan rose and came, and seeing a fellow-disciple clung to his feet.
Very meekly he spoke to him and repeatedly sought forgiveness for his offence: 'Thinking you a Jain I robbed you, no-one knew this secret matter of your guru.

näā: unless somehow for pahanā̄̄, which sense seems to require, perhaps for adv. näd, 'like', i.e. 'put an iron ring round his neck, and fetters on his feet likewise'?
itanauī dhana avara magāvai : i.e. Narvāhan or his men demanded a ransom equal to the amount already looted from the merchant.
chūtani pāvai: 'may be able to leave' - cf. 28 suni pāvai, where pā- follows the verb stem (as is increasingly common in MSH) rather than the obl. inf.
märaũ jite : lit. 'I shall kill him as he lives'.
sunū...sunāī: f. agreement is with an unstated bāta. Cf. 38 itanī sunata.
bhāla tilaka...kam!thīmālā: the two emblems of sectarian allegiance or membership - a forehead mark of the sectarian pattern (each sampradāy has its own design: see A.W. Entwistle 1982) and a necklace of seeds which is first worn after initiation into the sect.
(Sri) rādhāvallabha : piety dictates the addition of a metrically superfluous honorific to the sectarian mantra, but the caupaĭ line should be of only 15 mātrās: see II.2.5.
pichalī räti : the following night, the night coming. For the past/future usages of āge, piche and related words see M. Shapiro 1986.

45 'On your taking the guru's name I understood, then the servant explained the affair. 46 'Wipe out the error that occurred through me; the will of the lord was so ordained'.
47 When dawn broke he had him bathe and dressed him in radiant clothes and jewels;
49 That trust in the guru pleased him, and he bowed his head in service to [the Jain's] feet 50 prostrating himself and bidding him farewell, [Narvāhan] gave many servants to escort hin 51 Seeing the devotion that came to him, the merchant longed to become a disciple: 52 'He whose name I fraudulently recited has freed my body, my wealth, my life.
53 'Now I should take his darsan and place my all before him'.
54 So saying the merchant came to Vrindaban, and falling in prostration, bowed his head.
55 He explained his whole state [to Harivaḿś] - 'Thus have I come and sought refuge.
56 Dying, I lived, and that is through your grace; all this wealth is through you alone'.
57 Taking sixty jars filled with gold coins he placed them before Hit ji;
58 the guru said, 'You keep the money; and taste the relish of worshipping Hari and his devotees'.
59 Seeing his faith [Harivamśs] initiated him, and explained all about the [sectarian] ways. 60 'I did not even touch that money with my hands' - so saying the merchant took his leave.
61 After that, Narvāhan came; on being asked, he told the tale.
62 Through his grace [Harivamś] called him near, and recognising a loyal devotee, held him to his heart.
63 Seeing his virtues to be a mass and his faults to be minor, Hit jī again instructed him; 64 well pleased, the guru sang two hymns, putting Narvähan's signature into them.
65 Narvāhan is foremost among all devotees; seeing a faithful disciple gives great joy.
66 Bhagvat, Narvāhan was a devotee supremely single-minded and noble; even hearing the name spoken falsely he dedicated to it his body and his storehouse.

46 metau cūka ju mote bhaī: the impersonal construction (having cūka as subject) helps to mitigate the speaker's guilt - 'this mistake has occurred', rather than 'I have made this mistake'.
56 bhayā: the characteristically Khaṛi Bolī-ā termination here provides a convenient rhyme.
58 guruni kahi: this honorific pl. is treated like a numerical pl. - cf. VV 110 and note. (The alternative with 'gurus' as a numerical pl., seems unlikely in this sectarian context where Hit Harivams is the sole guru and is never mentioned alongside equals.)
58 harijana : there is of course absolutely no implication of the euphemistic sense 'untouchable' for which this term was to be appropriated by Gandhi in the twentieth century.
59 nāma sunāyau: i.e. gave him the sectarian mantra.
64 This line refers to two stanzas in the Caurāsī-pad (also known as Hit-caurāsí) of Hit Harivam̌s: stanzas 11 and 12 bear the chāp (or bhog) of Narvāhan, and it is presumed that they were 'dedicated' to him by their author. See R. Snell 1991a.
saba sevaka me: obl.p. -na termination is dropped (for metrical convenience?).

1 Knowing them to be his private members, skilful King Youth gave a big rise to breasts, hearts, eyes and buttocks.
2 The young girl merged into the moonlight and could not be seen at all; but following the threads of her fragrance, the sakhi-bee accompanied her.
3 In the dazzlement of her brilliance, the Thug of her beauty casts the noose of a smile, striking and seizing my wayfarer-eyes, and casting them into her chin's hollow!
4 Betel-juice on your eyelids, kohl on your lips, lac placed on your brow: You've done well in today's encounter - you are well got-up, Lāl!
5 Wearied after climbing her breast-mountains, my glance went on, desiring her mouth; but couldn't move again, just lay there fallen into the cleft of her chin.
6 No pollen, no sweet nectar, no blossoming yet;
if the bee is caught up with the bud even, what will happen later [when it blooms]?
$7 \quad$ What matter if my heart lose the company of yours?
Wherever it may fly, still the kite is in its flyer's hand.
8 The sparkle of childhood has not yet gone, yet youth glows in her limbs; with both together, the brilliance of taffeta shines in her body.
9 Only from the almanac can the date be found, all around that house: it remains ever full-moon night in the brightness of her face's lustre.
10 One cannot tread the righteous path, great dread is born in the world: that bandit Madan has taken the lofty peaks of her breasts as his fortress.

1 At the onset of maturity, Youth personified causes the advancement of its own attributes; the image rests on the ambiguity of 'members' ( amga ) as both 'faction in court' and 'limbs'
The heroine's fair complexion hides her on her moonlit tryst; but her fragrance gives her away,
3 The thag is a highwayman who garrottes travellers into whose party he has insinuated himself
The lover's wandering gaze is ensnared by the heroine's beauty and is left lying helpless in the dimple on her chin.
4 The betel-juice should be on the lips, the kohl on the eyes, the lac on the feet: their displacement is the result of love-making, as the couplet cryptically observes. dhare mahāvaru bhāla: i.e. MSH bhāl par mahāvar dhare (hue) hẫ.

10.1 nigama maga : the path prescribed by the Vedas, now made impassable by Madan, god of love.

13 Gathering her tresses with her hands, arms back, veil thrown back on shoulder whose heart would she not bind, she who binds her hair?
14 Wrapped round his dusky, lovely body the yellow sash shines like sunshine fallen on a sapphire mountain at dawn.
15 A natural colour has not yet come to this body, emaciated by separation: can talk of going, o lover, be coming already?
16 No moonlight, this - it is that darkness, which has made the world its home; at the rising of the moon, it seems, it has turned white through fear.
17 The days in which you saw those blooms - that springtime has passed away; and now all that is left of the rose, o bee, is the leafless, thorny bough.
18 Grant salvation to me too, as you have granted to many a wretch; or if only binding appeals, bind me in the strands of your qualities.

With that winding curl falling freed across it, her face's splendour has increased just as by writing a curved line a 'penny' becomes a 'shilling'. 41.2 diñe daī 'God it was who gave...'

The omaments are inferior to the natural beauty of the body they are meant to beautify; cf. 30,73 hvai : the 'via' sense of MSH (se) hokar.
41.1 sakai : the diphthong $a i$ is to be scanned as two short syllables.
41.1 barenu: obl.pl. from barau.

43 In Indian currency, a curved line marks off the rupee from the coin of smaller value, just as in British pre-metric currency, '3/6d' stood for 'three shillings and sixpence'. In Bihāri's time the rupee was ub-divided into (40?) dām, such that the amount 'twelve rupees and twenty dām' would be written २२)२•'. (This would represent 'twelve rupees and 20 paise ' in decimal currency.) In the same way the dangling curl on the heroine's face revalues her beauty.
By what route will Hari enter this heart-dwelling unless the tightly-jammed door of falsehood opens?
Neither do you glance with dancing eyes, nor do you speak with a smile: the more you adopt this harsh aspect, the more unctuous you make my mind! Seeing the lover's flying kite, the lady in the courtyard runs about like a lunatic, touching its lovely shadow.
Grasp the rosary as a rudder - there is no other way and cross the ocean of worldly existence, with Hari's name itself as a boat. How can one dwell or survive in the city of love? There is no propriety there; the eyes it is which ensnare, yet hearts are caught unjustly.
It is as though the Creator, in order to keep pure her body's bright lustre, made her ornaments as a doormat for the wiping of the eye-feet.
I see on waking that just as before, the chain is fastened on the door:
which way does he come and go away again, who knows, by what path?
Hearing a footfall she looked hither while bathing, and with back still turned, startled, she bent over, shrank back alarmed - and laughed with bashful glance.
Who dare say anything to the great, seeing even a major fault?
God it was who gave, to these rose stems, those [tender] blooms.
In this hope alone, the bee remains attached to the root of the rose-bush: that in the spring will be once more, on these stems, those blooms. gau = gayau.

44 The weight of the breasts on your bosom grows, filled with youth's blooming; with those burdens on their hearts, the co-wives can barely breathe.
45 Friend, panic really struck when, halfway [to the tryst], I saw the moon; but the bees accompanying me made the lane, luckily, dark!
46 One is drenched, [or] falls in the mire; a thousand are drowned and washed away: how many misdeeds the rising river of age commits in the world!
47 Even in the lamplight, at her husband's removing of her clothes for lovemaking, she remains clad in the lustre of beauty, modesty not compromised at all.
48 Seeing the army of her lover's hands running to strip her of cover, modesty made her eyes a refuge, and remained in the dense thicket of her lashes.
49 Abashed at the very outset of lovemaking, shame felt shy and took its leave; slipping slyly and smoothly closer, drawing close, bold boldness came.
50 Peacocks in the wood suddenly broke into a dance, out of season; and thus I know, Nandkisor has gladdened this region.
51 I am all in a whirl, Lāl, seeing that peerless girl; how much sweetness has God given her, and in such savoury form!
52 All around, groups of woods and groves are seen blossoming, as though spring, king of seasons, had made an arrow-cage for separated lovers.
53 These are not the fire-fierce winds blowing all around: it seems they are the sighs of summer in the pain of spring's parting.
54 What is a flower, what the moonlight; how lustrous is a looking-glass? When one sees her brilliance, the eye brightens.

44 The co-wives (sauti) are oppressed by the appearance of budding maturity in the body of their rival, the new young bride.
A heroine going to a clandestine tryst is saved from discovery in the waxing moonlight by a blackout of bees swarming to her fragrance: a variation of the conceit in 2 .
bhāganu: obl.pl. of bhāga '(good) fortune', used adverbially - 'fortunately'.
kite na auguna....karar: the negative is rhetorical, 'how many misdeeds does the river of age not do?'. carhatī bāra: 'at the time of rising'.
Syntax: lāja, drganu gurhau kari, gārhar barunī-vana [mê] rahī. dhith $i=$ dhitha (a well-attested variant in this line).
binu pāvasa: 'without the rainy season' (when peacocks usually perform their courting display). rahi: f. gender defines the context - the sakhi speaks to the hero of the heroine's beauty. salonar : the literal sense (< Skt sa-lavana , 'salty, tasty') is essential to the conceit. Cf. MSH (< Pers.) namkīn, 'salty, savoury, tasty, beautiful, racy'.
sara pamjara: an 'iron maiden' or cage fitted with inward-pointing spikes. Here the blossoming of spring, reviving memories of past pleasures, becomes a torture-chamber for separated lovers.

55 Why does the dark-hued terrifying one come to this house?
Often I have seen, friend, that seeing him brings a trembling to your body.
56 Touching the little finger, you swallow the wrist - pretending such humility! After hearing the story of Bali and the dwarf, who, pray, would trust you?
57 Hidden, her lovely face shines through the blue border of her veil as though the moon were twinkling in the waters of the Yamuna
58 After examining, with a knowledge of woman's vein, I diagnose with certainty: he is the cause of the disease, he the physician, he the healing herb.
59 Free, your silken tresses free me from this world; tied in a braid, your lustrous black hair ties up my heart.
60 A son being born, the astrologer was pained to read a horoscope of patricide; but then, delight in his heart, he cast a bastard birth.

61 Her playful eyes flash through the fine cloth of her veil like a pair of fishes leaping in the pure waters of the Ganges.
62 Shaking the mountain with shaking hand, and seeing all Braj afraid, trembling as he viewed the maiden, thoroughly ashamed was Lā!!
63 Say now, who could extract it, even making scores of efforts? My mind has become blended with Mohan's beauty as salt in water.
64 She takes it in her hand, kisses it, touches it to her head, hugs it in her arm receiving her lover's letter she looks at it, reads it, folds it, stores it away.
65 Filled with longing, brimful with love, filled with love's pain all their talk: millions of messages flew between them as they walked to the door.
55.1 kāre barana: the dark stranger is Krsna; and the trembling is from sentiments other than fear.

56 The myth of Bali and the dwarf (see 'Bali' in the Index of Epithets) teaches that conceding an initial moden in may one door to unlooked-for implicalis. hererence heroine's wrist - may conceal a lager ambition 58.1 nārī jinānu: a pun, nearly accommodated in translation, on nārī 'woman' vs. nārī/nărī 'vein, artery'.
60.1 The syntax, which allows exceptional economy of narrative, is: bhayay suta, pitamāraka jogu gani, cita [me] sogu bhayau
61.2 The point of the comparison is that the Ganges is regarded as being fair in colour; cf. the Yamuna's 'blueness' implicit in 57, and the note to 75 .
62 A decadent variation on the 'lifting of Govardhan hill' motif: the sight of Rādhā makes Krṣna tremble, and he nearly drops the hill on the Braj people.
kīnar hü: 'even on doing'.
63.2 mohana rūpu : as typically, mohana can be read either as a name of Krṣna or as the adj. 'charming'.
63.2 pān̄̄ mar kau launu : the double ppn. gives the sense 'the salt which is in water' [MSH pānī mé kā lavan ; cf. MSH phrases of the type mez par kī kitäb 'the book [which is] on the table', etc.]. (The 'saline' image is defective: salt is easily separated from water by distillation!)
carhāi sira : touching to the forehead an object (such as a book or anything containing writing) indicates reverence to it.

66 Though the world reprove, I shall not give up my rakishness, Dīndayāl: you'd be discomforted, dwelling in a straightened heart, o Lāl of the three curves.
67 Standing far apart, in their hearts they enjoy [a feeling of] being close: in the very eyes of both is the mirth and merriment of sweet talk.
68 Somehow managing to sit up, lover and beloved at dawn both quite overcome with sleep, embrace - and fall back again.
69 It is so crushed, merciless one - God! - her flower-like body; place your hand on her and see, still the throbbing of her heart does not leave. Born from her eyelids, passing her lashes - nor do her cheeks stop them the tears fall onto her breast, sizzle for a moment, and are gone.
71 Though one make scores of efforts, the burning of her body will not go until her lover clings to her like a drenched garment.
72 The bodies of the two are merged with shadow and with moonlight [respectively]: Hari and Rādhā walk together, going along the lane.
73 Reflections of all her limbs fall in the mirror of her whole body; twofold, threefold, fourfold her jewels seem to be.
74 They mount a tightrope of glances tied between the rooftops and fear not to run: to and fro the hearts of the two, like acrobats, come and go.
75 Leave pilgrimage places, and have love for the bodily splendour of Hari and Rādhikā, through whose Braj sports every step along the arbour path becomes a Prayāg.
76 Well, skilful Nandkiśor, it is well done I swear, if you look kindly toward my deed.
he couplet plays on the literal and metaphorical senses of kutilatā, 'crookedness, perversity', pose with jauntily bent neck, waist and knee) and the metaphorical image of the una in his fluting bhakta, for whom the rules of normative behaviour have no meaning. chipa $j$ atta : the sense of 'hiding' is subsidiary to the alliterative sequence of $c h$ sounds which suggest the spluttering of tears on the virahini's burning breast.
The image of diaphanously clinging wet clothes (revealing more than they conceal) is as striking to Bihārī as it is to the makers of modern Hindi films, for whom this continues to be a stock image. jau laũ ...cira laũ : the ppn. is used in two distinct senses, 'until' and 'like' respectively.
Dark Krṣna is invisible in the shadows: and fair Rādhā in the moonlight.
The heroine's body is more lustrous than the jewels which are supposed to lend it lustre.
The couplet subsumes the traditional places of pilgrimage - including even Prayāg, the greatest Iirtha - under the groves of Rādhā and Krssna's sport in Braj, thereby implicitly subsuming smārta Hinduism under bhakti. Ratnäkar's typically creative commentary suggests that the fair and dark bodies of Rādhā and Krsṇa respectively represent the Ganges and Yamuna whose confluence at rayag makes it the tirtharaja or king of pilgrimage places', the mythical third river, Sarasvati, being represented by the devotee's anuräga.

1 You are ever the remover of obstacles - Ganapati, be my help; with folded hands I pray to you: complete this book.
2 He who made all this visible world through his own will [alone]; him I salute, with hands folded and head bowed.
3 Compassionately he ever nourishes the life-breath of all creation; may contemplation of such a lord remain in my heart night and day
4 'You dwell in my heart' - why should such a thing be said? Then why not embrace this soul to yourself?
5 When the impassioned mind unites with Syām, it is not more deeply infused; a wonder, this - it has become pure, and immediately has lost its uncleanness.

In this way when all equivalence is present, know this to be a 'simile' "bright as the moon is the woman's face, soft as blossom her hands".
7 'Signifier', 'property', 'subject described', fourth is 'object of comparison' lacking one, two or three [of these], an 'incomplete simile' is attested:
8 "The lotus-faced one is like lightning"; "behold, the woman is a jasmine"; "lo, the lady is the causal image of the erotic sentiment".
9 When the subject itself is the object, it is called a 'simile without connexion': "as a match for your face there is only your face".
10 If a simile applies reciprocally, it is a 'reciprocal comparison': "the wagtails are like your eyes, and your eyes are like wagtails".
[NB: double quotation marks (" ") in the translation indicate an example of a particular figure of speech.] 3.2 Syntax: aise īsvara ko dhyāna, 'contemplation of such a lord' (ko being genitive).
4.2 aisī kyō kahi jāi : f. agreement is with bāta (understood).

5 The couplet rests on untranslatable word-plays: rāgī, both 'impassioned' and 'red'; syāma, both 'Krṣna' and 'dark'; lāa, both 'dear Krṣna' and 'red'; ujjala, both 'pure' and 'white'; finally maila ('pollution, discolourant') connects the two sets of meanings. The conceit has a close parallel in BS 11; and the concept of the sanctification of passion is reflected in VV 191-194
6.1 ihi bidhi : this may refer to a previous couplet, absent here but given by Grierson, defining the simile. 7.1 [a] bäcaka: the word implying comparison, e.g. (in 6.2 ) so; [b] dharma, the shared quality, e.g. 'brightness'; [c] barnaniya, the subject of comparison, or upameya, e.g. 'the woman's face' [d] upamäna, the object of comparison, e.g. 'the moon'. (In what follows, the words 'subject' and 'object' are to be understood in these technical senses.)
8 The three examples of 'incomplete similes' lack [b], [a] [b], and [a] [b] [d] respectively.
8.2 The implicit comparison is indicated by Grierson's translation: 'Lo, the lady (is) [fair] [as] [love itself], (for she) is the causal image of the erotic sentiment'. Alternatively, the moon may be meant. kahata : the impersonal usage familiar from MSH, e.g. ise kyā kahte har? 'What is this called?'.
10.2 Seya : apparently a forced rhyme-form for se.

11 It is an 'inverse simile' when the object is made into the subject:
"the lotuses look lovely like your eyes"; the moon is described as "like your face".
12 [A second type is] when the subject receives no honour by [comparison with] the object: "Are you proud of your face? Look well at the moon!".
13 [Thirdly] when the object is slighted by the subject:
"compared with the piercing glances of her eyes, blunt are Kāmdev's arrows".
14 [Fourthly] when the object is not worthy of equivalence to the subject: "Who would compare her utterly bright eyes to the fish?".
15 [And finally] when the object is useless, seeing the excellence of the subject: "before her eyes, the deer['s] are nothing" - these are the five kinds of 'converse simile'.
16 Metaphor is of two kinds; together, [these are] 'equivalent' and 'identical'; 'superior', 'inferior', 'equal' - these are the three varieties of each.
17 "Her moon-face is superior to that moon, shining in brilliance day and night"; "she was not born of the ocean, but is a different resplendent Lakṣm".
18 "These eyes are lotuses indeed - what need is there of other lotuses?"; "This lady is a jasmine who looks nice when moving".
19 "Her coral lips are most resplendent, but were not born of the ocean"; "your lotus face is pure, so sweet, fragrant and joyful".
20 When a subject acts after becoming the object, it is a 'transference': "look at the lady, she looks with those wide lotus-eyes!".
21 That is a 'representation', when various people perceive a thing in varied ways: "to supplicants, he seems a wishing-tree; to women, Kāmdev; to an enemy, death".

11 Sub-categories of the 'inverse simile' are described in couplets 12-15.
14 ujjala : the variant reading uttama seems more apposite, since the 'fish' simile alludes primarily to the eyes' tapered shape and nimble movement, rather than their brightness. Thus Grierson (reading uttama): 'Who would compare to the (silvery darting) fish, her perfect eyes (floating in tears)'. Syntax and metre do not coincide: drga āgé mrga kachu na, ye pañca pratipa prakära.
16.2 tīni tuni : repetition indicates distribution - three varieties in each type.
17.1 An 'equivalent' (tadrūpa) metaphor of the 'greater' category.
17.2 An 'equivalent' metaphor of the 'lesser' category: the heroine shares Laksmi's beauty, but not her marine origin. (Laksmi 'sprang, like Aphrodite, from the froth of the ocean, in full beauty with a lotus in her hand, when it was churned by the gods and the Asuras' - Dowson 1982:176).
18.1 An 'equivalent' metaphor of the 'exactly equal' variety; aina is both 'indeed' and 'eyes'.
18.2 An 'identical' metaphor of the 'superior' variety - the heroine is not just an ordinary jasmine but a An 'identical' metaphor of the 'superior' variety - the heroine is not just an ordinary jasmine but a walking one (other senses of gavana/gamana apart). (The lady is a jasmine; whereas the 'eyes' in the previous line were merely equivalent in function to their parallel, the lotus.)
19.1 An 'identical' metaphor of the 'inferior' variety.
19.2 An 'identical' metaphor of the 'exactly equal' variety

22 When one describes one thing in many ways because of its various qualities, that [too] is a 'representation': "in combat you are an Arjuna, in brilliance the sun, and a Brthaspati in the distinction of your speech".
23 'Recollection', 'mistake' and 'doubt' - these attributes are evident in their names: "reminiscence of that face comes when I see the nectarous moon".
24 "Thinking your face to be the nectarous moon, these partridges wander with you"; "is this her face, or is it the cool-rayed moon, or is it a lotus at the coming of dawn?"
25 When a quality is concealed by superimposition, know it to be 'entire denial': "these are not breasts on her chest - consider them jasmine fruits".
26 When one conceals a subject through artifice it is 'motivated denial': "neither is the moon hot, nor is there sun at night - see it as submarine fire indeed".
27 'Transposition' is when the quality of one thing is superimposed on another: "this is not the nectarous moon, but the brilliance of her nectarous face".
28 'Denial following error' is when another person's mistake is removed by words: "Your hot trembling is not from fever - no, dear, it is Kāmdev who inflames you".
29 'Artful denial' is when a thing is concealed from another person by contrivance: "It is not my lover who wounds my lip, dear, but the winter wind".
30 'Deceitful denial' is when one thing is described as another by pretence: "Pretending they are sharp female glances, Kāmdev rains down his arrows".
31 With regard to a 'thing', 'cause', or 'purpose', imagination [yields] an 'ascription': "her eyes are like lotuses - luscious and particularly broad".
32 "It seems she has walked in a rough courtyard, that is why her feet are red"; "for likeness to your feet, the lotus serves the water single-mindedly".

22 This figure involves the objective appraisal of the hero's various qualities, and is therefore distinct from that of 21, where perceptions of the hero's qualities are coloured by the subjective views of from that of 21, whe different individuals.
24.1,2 Examples of the 'mistake' and 'doubt' figures respectively.
24.2 cakora: the partridge, fabled to subsist on moonbeams, is an image of single-mindedness of devotion. 25.1 suddha-apanhuti : for Skt suddhāpahnuti. (Cf. metathetical -nh- for -hn- in cinha < cihna.)
25.2 kanakalatā phala: cf. 8.1 and 18.2.
26.2 The 'concealed' subject is the burning pain of viraha. Grierson: 'The moon should quench her fever, as water quenches fire, but, instead, only increases it, as the ocean feeds the submarine fire at its bottom. The fierceness of the moon is the cause of the comparison'.
27 Another variety of the apahnuti figure.
32.1,2 Examples of 'ascriptions' based on 'cause' and 'purpose' respectively.
32.2 The lotus, a conventional upamãna for the foot, 'serves' the water (i.e. remains standing in it) in order to achieve a beauty like that of the heroine's feet (which have a natural rosy colour, or are decorated with lac).

33 The figure 'hyperbole' is where there is the object alone:
"there is a moon on a jasmine, holding a bow and two arrows"
34 In the 'obstinate denial' [hyperbole], the quality of a thing is predicated upon another: "this face of yours is nectar-filled, only madmen say the moon [to be so]".
35 Hyperbole of 'distinction' are all described in this manner: "quite other is her laughing and glancing, quite other her talk".
36 Hyperbole of 'relationship' bestows connexion on the unconnected. "people say the buildings of this town are as high as the moon".
37 The second hyperbole [of 'relationship'] is that calling the connected unconnected: "how could the wishing-tree attain honour in front of your hand?"
38 The 'non-sequential' hyperbole is whenever cause and effect are together: "your arrows connect simultaneously to your bow and to your enemy's body".
39 'Rapidness' is that [hyperbole] whose effect follows the mere name of the cause: "her ring became her very bracelet, hearing of her lover's leaving today".
40 The hyperbole of 'exaggeration' is that having no sequential order "before the arrow even reaches his body, the enemy falls".
41 These are the three [types of] 'equal pairing' - know their characteristics in order: one word bears both good and bad; a single quality [exists] in several [words]
42 [and] when many [attributes] are one in their qualities - thus are the three varieties "O abode of virtues, well you give a garland to the lady, and defeat to the enemy".
"The lustre of the new bride's face and of the lotus is faded". "You alone are the abode of good fortune and of righteousness; you alone are Indra and the moon".
33.2 The four subjects of comparison - the heroine's face, body, eyebrows and glances - are omitted
36.2 There is no actual parallel between the buildings' height and the moon, except rhetorically. Cf. a similar example from Carl Sandberg, quoted by Gerow (1971:22). They have yams / of a skyscraper so tall they had to put hinges / on the two top stories so to let the moon go by'
37.2 kalapataru: [Skt kalpataru], one of the five trees of Indra's heaven, which yields all desires. It thus represents the bountiful patron, this parallel being denied in the terms of the present figure. The heroine became instantaneously emaciated through grief.
Lit. 'the arrow does not reach his body, the enemy first falls down' 41.2 bāni : (< varṇa) 'quality, character, nature' (as opposed to bān̄̌ < vān̄ī 'speech').
gunanidhi : i.e. God, the creator. The figure, which illustrates the 'good and bad' (or 'auspicious and inauspicious') implications of a single word, hinges on the two senses of hära as (a) 'garland' and (b) defeat'. A further play on the multifarious senses of guna (e.g. 'garland' and 'bowstring') may als be involved.
The heroine's face and the lotus share the same characteristic: cf. 41.2
Four distinct qualities - wealth, righteousness, majesty (like Indra's) and brilliance - are shared by the same person.

44 That is an 'illuminator' when the subject and another thing are described similarly [but] according to their own qualities: "the elephant through his rut and the king from his valour establish their fame"
45 The 'illuminator with repetition' is of three kinds: that having repetition of a word; then, the second is described as that having a repetition of meaning 46 [and] recognize the third 'repetition' as that of both word and meaning: "the clouds pour rain, o friend see, the night is a year indeed".
47 "The kadamba trees are flowering and the ketaka is in bloom";
"excited are the peacocks, and excited the cuckoo - praise them".
48 Know that to be a 'counterpart simile' when there are two similar statements: the glory of the sun is from its fine brilliance, the glory of the hero is from his bow".
49 The characteristics of the figure 'exemplification' are known from its name: "the moon alone was made lustrous, illustrious are you alone".

50 When there is a repetition of several syllables, two of each when there is not similarity of vowels, it is 'clever alliteration'.
51 "Kohl is smeared on the lips, beloved, and betel-juice on the eyes, the impress of a pearl necklace is well apparent on your hard heart".
52 That is 'Gujarati alliteration' when a word is repeated and there is a difference of meaning without any difference in the words:
53 "For she whose lover is not at hand, moonlight is like the sun's heat; for she whose lover is at hand, friend, the sun's heat is like moonlight".

44 dipaka : 'a construction wherein several parallel phrases are each completed by a single (unrepeated) word or phrase; zeugma' (Gerow 1971:193). Cf. RB 25 and 28.
46.2 With its play on barakhai 'pour rain' vs. barakhai 'year indeed' (barakha+-i), this is an illustration of the first kind of 'repetition', as defined in 45.1.
47.1 Both trees are described as blossoming, but the expressions are different: hence this is a 'repetition' Both trees are described as of the second type (45.2).
47.2 Both the quality (excitement) and the descriptive word (matta) are shared: hence this is a 'repetition' of the third type (46.1). The shared excitement is at the coming of the rains - the mating season for he peacock, and the source of sustenance for the cuckoo (fabled to subsist on raindrops)
48 'Prativastûpamā involves the repetition of the common property; there need be no parallelism of terms within the two situations' (Gerow 1971:208). Here the figure hinges on the two distinct senses of süra as both 'sun' and 'warrior, hero'.
49 drstānta : 'the adjunction of a second situation which bears upon the same point as the first and where the purpose is entirely one of illustration' (Gerow 1971:208)
51 adhara...pyāre; pyāre...pika; muktamāla; upaṭ̄...pragata, etc. For a parallel context, cf. BS 4.
53.1,2 The second line, with cädani as predicate of ghāma, is of course considerably less forced than the first.

54 Know that to be a 'pun', when on hearing a word again the meanings are different: "sandalwood paste and the moon are not cooling, they seem hotter than fire".
55 When each character occurs often it is called 'repetition' - consider the three kinds: know that in which all the syllables are melodious to be 'cultured'; the second is called 'harsh', in which there are many compounds; that one without compounds and without melodiousness is called 'delicate'.
57 "Very dark and heavy are the clouds, the beloved is of tender years; her lover is abroad, and the worry is this - that no message comes".
"Flocks of black cuckoos, pied cuckoos, shrikes, harsh peacocks and partridges: hearing their din, my heart throbs - Kāmdev's army is so powerful!"
59 "Clouds pour rain, lightning flashes, all around are water-waves; Kämdev delights greatly through the gladness in the couple's hearts."
60 I have described all the one hundred and eight ornaments of meaning; after seeing the Sanskrit texts I have rendered them in the vernacular.
61 There are many ornaments of sound, through the conjunction of characters; I have described those six kinds of alliteration which are appropriate for the vernacular.
62 I have prepared this new book for the sake of that person who is learned, conversant with the vernacular, and skilled in poetry.
63 [Here are] the characteristics of heroines and heroes, the blandishments wherein poetic flavour dwells; through the admixture of ornaments its name is 'The embellishment of language'.
64 One who peruses attentively the book Bhāṣā-bhūşan will appreciate all the various meanings of the essence of poetry.

54 The 'difference of sense' is illustrated in candana vs. canda na-$56.2 t \bar{a} s a: ~ p r . t \bar{a}+\mathrm{ppn} . s u$, in rhyme form.
57 The 'melodiousness' referred to in the definition of upanāgarikā (55.2) is illustrated through a succession of - $\bar{a}$-vowels in the first line, and -esa alliteration in the second
58 The first line is of compounded nouns and, with its repeated - $k$ - throughout, the couplet illustrates, the 'harsh' variety of alliteration (56.1). ('Kämdev's army', which so terrifies the lover, is the birds' spring chorus, the sound of which forewarns of the tribulations of love.)
59 Free of lengthy compounds and of the 'melodiousness' exemplified in 57, this couplet illustrates the delicate' variety of alliteration (56.2).
alamंkära saba artha ke : this is presumably to include both 'sound' and 'sense' omaments: cf. Grierson's reading alamkära sabdartha $k e$, in which compounded sabdärtha implies 'literal meaning'. eka sau atha: ' 108 is a sacred or auspicious number in metaphysics (and hence formulaic in literature and rhetoric).
sabdālamkrta: for nominal ${ }^{\circ} t i$ (Grierson's reading).
61 änupräsa sata bidhi : i.e. those six varieties of alliteration defined and illustrated in couplets 50-59.

1 Though good, something said at an inappropriate time seems insipid, just as in describing warfare, the amorous sentiment does not please.
2 Though insipid, something may seem good if said with consideration of the time, just as abusive speech delights the hearts of all at a wedding.
3 Tell me sir, how could one attain the treasure of knowledge without effort? - Just as you do not get a breeze from a fan without swinging it.

4 One talks of the faults of that thing which one does not like: 'burning, tainted, full of poison' says the lovelorn woman of the moon.
5 The pride of an excellent man is dispelled by sweet words, just as the boiling-over of milk is stopped with a little cold water.
6 All are helpers of the strong, there is no help for the weak: wind rouses the fire but puts out the lamp.
7 One should practise that by which one's livelihood is maintained: if a whore observed modest conduct, how could she fulfil her desire?

8 Abandoning ostentation, accumulate pleasing qualities: a milkless cow will not be sold by tying a bell to it.

9 As God has granted quality, so has he withheld beauty: where are these two found [together] - gold and fragrance?

10 How could anyone utter an opinion without seeing, without hearing? What will the well-frog know of the extent of the ocean?
1.1 abasara: this text often represents unstressed original $v$ as $b$. Cf. 2.2 bibāha, 4.1 abaguna etc.
2.2 bibāha mar gāri : during a traditional wedding, women sing gāl̄̄s (abusive songs of explicit vulgarity) to taunt the bridegroom and his relatives.
3.2 pamkhā: the large cloth fan suspended from the ceiling and swung to and fro by a string (with a pamikhāvālā at the other end).
4.1 so tāke...jo jih 7 : such paired relative/correlatives are common in aphoristic couplets - cf. 31.
4.2 tapata kalamiki bisa bharyau: to the virahinī, all the traditional qualities of the moon - usually tapata kalamki bisa bharyau: to the virahinī, all the traditional quali described as cooling, brilliant, and a source of nectar - are reversed.
8.1 The caesura is not a syntactic break: āḍambara taji, kijie guna samgraha..

9 Cf. the MSH idioms sone mé sugandh, sonā-sugandh, etc., 'gold and fragrance', i.e. two distinct and dissimilar qualities appearing together in one place.
10.2 Kūpa bhekha : the 'frog in the well' [MSH kuẽ kā médhak] is a stock image for one with a limited knowledge of the world (but who croaks on regardless).

11 As are the strengths of one's family, so will one speak: what would a merchant's son know of the stratagems for taking a fort?

12 Be not excessively straightforward: see the tree of the forest the completely straight ones are felled, the bent tree survives.
13 No-one believes a liar, even though he speak the truth: when the buffoon cries out in pain, everyone thinks it a sham.
14 When it's time for work, they suffer who keep company with the weak: just as the lady's limbs endure bruising and tearing.
15 Through [the efforts of] little men, the great maintain their splendour, just as the doormat keeps the white floor-sheet spotless.

16 Keep matters of love within your heart, just as the shadow of the well falls not outside.

17 A union of crooked and straight cannot endure in the end, just as the fine arrow leaves the bow, though grasping its string.

18 'Nothing can be done without me' - he who says this is foolish: is there no dawn there, where the cock does not crow?

19 All get a turn, each in his own place:
in the water, the cart is on the boat, on dry land, the boat on the cart.
20 Tell me, how could one teach knowledge without intelligence?
If there is no village to start with, how could there be a boundary?
21 Don't prattle overmuch, but act when you get the opportunity: keeping silent, the heron catches the fish when its chance comes 11.2 banika [= KhB baniyā ]: the universal disdain reserved for the merchant classes doubtless had a particularly sharp edge in the context of the princely court, and is here compounded with a raditional emphasis on the restraints of individual dharma.
12 A rather more worldly-wise version of the conceit appearing in BS 66.
14 This conceit rests upon a pun on käma as being both 'work' and 'passion' : a weak workmate means trouble, just as the limbs of the abalā ('frail woman, member of the weaker sex') may means trouble, just as turing lovemaking.
17.1 bã́ke sidhe : antonyms referring metaphorically to qualities of character as respectively 'rakish, crooked' and 'simple, straightforward'. Cf. 12 and BS 66.
7.2 guna grähi : based on a conventional pun with guna meaning both 'quality' and 'string', the phrase means both 'having qualities' and 'grasping the bowstring'. Cf. BS 18.

22 Pious folk worship continually, applying their minds to Hari's feet, just as the acrobat, with steady gaze, sets his foot on the tightrope.
23 Whether in sentiment or in anger, do not trust your enemy; just as throwing water - whether cold or hot - puts the fire out.
24 All speak falsely when talking of their eminence:
the whore diminishes her years, the yogi exaggerates his.
25 The miser neither consumes nor spends his wealth, and the thief takes it all away; then, like a honey-bee, he rubs his hands in remorse.
26 These games of wealth and of ball are one in nature: in a moment it comes into the hand, in a moment goes again.
27 Never be proud of wealth or youthfulness:
they disappear before your very eyes, like the shadow of a cloud 28 Even for the powerful, the creator has made a means of subjugation: a lamp for the darkness; an ankus for the elephant; and to cross the ocean, a ship.

29 Filling his belly by dancing, the acrobat fears not to do what he must: he sets his foot on the rope, and falling, clings to the rope.

30 The learned man considers a matter thoroughly and grasps its essence; the churner, rejecting the buttermilk, extracts the butter.
31 He who is skilled in a certain work is expert in its secrets: the elephant is swept away by the river's flow, the minnow swims against the stream.
32 On a Monday in the light half of Kārttika, in samvat 1761, on the [fortnight's] seventh day in the city of Dhaka, was produced this [work] with great thought.
22.2 dharata barata para payya: the elegant phrase seems to have pleased Vrnd - cf. 29.2, where alliteration is again involved. An example of Vfnd's tendency towards formulaic composition.
26.1 dhana aru gêda ju khela kaũ: rel.pr. ju emphasizes the subject by restatement; kaũ governs eka subhāya [MSH dhan aur yauvan ke jo khel hat, dono kā ek hĭ svabhäv hai ]. See examples under I.4.4.
28.2 jalanidhi tarani jahāja: implicit in this phrase is the commonplace concept of the name of God as a boat to cross the ocean of worldly existence; cf. SS 4.8, RAM 39, etc.
29.1 bharata peta: i.e. earning his livelihood (which necessitates the risks described here)
31.2 carhai ulata : lit. 'ascends contrarywise'. The context is a counter-example to 6 .
32.1 sasi rasa bāra sasi : 'moon, flavour, day, moon' - symbols for the numbers ' $1,6,7,1$ ', which are read in reverse order as a chronogram to yield the samvat date 1761 (= A.D. 1704). See

1 In the first period of the fourth watch, sitting in the elders' place, each minute and each moment has become a mountain, so difficult to traverse.

2 Sitting with the elder folk, separated from her lover, the palace appeals to the bride not for a moment; the next watch has become an aeon, now how can the lady reach the night?
Startled from sleep, she watches the sun, and (the poet Dev likewise) is oppressed by talk as she fritters away the daytime; talking to her maidservant she signals to her friends and she hears no words as she makes her eyes dance.
3 In the second period of the fourth watch comes the time for adornment; to the pleasure palace she sends the sakhi to prepare and decorate the couch.
4 With exceeding impatience and filled with great zeal, her desire ascended the path of love for the tryst; grandly the fair one arose from the elders' assembly, her waist bent with the burden of her tresses
With sandalwood, aloes and camphor she sent the sakhi to prepare and make ready the chamber of the pleasure-bed; attended by a servant, and - declares Dev - herself like a goddess, the beautiful one came smiling to the house of delight.
5 In the third period of the fourth watch she anointed her body, applied a pomade and bathed, and put on a yellow garment.
6 Dressing her hair with pomade and anointing her saffron-bright body with saffron, she bathed in rose-water;
oiled with attar and wiping herself with a fine fabric, she dried her breasts, laughing a laugh of loving sentiment.
[stanza 6 continues...]
1 ghari...pahara...chinu...pala: the day is divided into eight 'watches' of three hours (pahara or jäma, Sk prahara, yäma) each of which is sub-divided into eight gharis. A chinu (Skt ksana) is a period of four minutes, while a pala is one sixtieth of a gharī, i.e. a period of 24 seconds.
kăte...katai na : ‘cannot be traversed by traversing', i.e. 'cannot be passed despite trying'. Cf. SB 8.5 . sunai nahi baina su naina nacāvai : the heroine is deaf to her servant's smalltalk, and signals to her sakhis that she is anticipating the tryst. Note the alliterative sequence sunai nahi...su naina namala sigāa: a compound of the Persian izafat type, in which the second element qualifies the first kacani ke bhāra kai : kai = kari, thus 'with the weight of her hair'. (A variant reading with kucan 'breasts', is perhaps what is really intended, this being the conventional conceit.)
$j u$ : a metrical filler, having no function in the sentence except perhaps a general demonstrative sense.

[stanza 6 concluded:]

Her waist like a lion's, her face as it were a moon; and sharp, Dev, her glances learnt from a fawn; wearing a yellow garment she stood on a pretty stool, her lunar loveliness bright as a moonbeam.
7 In the fourth period of the fourth watch, calling for fragrant clothes, she looks at the ornaments, gems and jewels, and puts on whatever appeals.
8 Choosing variously from clothes of ambergris, attar and 'four-fold fragrance', the sakhi brought fragrances of various kinds;
in caskets of gold she brought gems and jewels, and brought a posy of blooms, Dev, from a wild flowerbed.
[Yet] all became faint in lustre before that beauty's faint smile, for brighter than the moon itself was the brilliant face of the beloved; empty seemed the constellations' net; cropped, that stand of torches; easily she had twice the brilliance of the full-moon night.
9 In the fifth period of the fourth watch, she puts on red raiment, and decorates her body in various ways, delighting in ornament and apparel.
10 Rubbing her lotus-like feet and [applying] lac colour, she puts on fine anklets and toe-rings with natural grace; then donning a bright jewelled ankle-ring, she ties on waist-bells - the battle-drums of Kāmdev!
She looks at her brow-dot in the glass, joyfully draws tight her bodice, and braiding her hair, dons a necklace - Dev's desire; putting kohl round her eyes and cleansing her face with attar, she takes to her fair hand a jewelled bracelet.
11 In the sixth period of the fourth watch she takes a mirror in her hand and sees how splendidly her limbs gleam with the various colours of her ornaments.
6.4 cãdanī sī pyārī pai ujyārī mahatāba sõ : the conceit, with two aspects of the moon put into opposition câdanī sī pyär̄̄ pai ujyārī̀ mahatā̄a sa sõ : the conceit, with two aspects of the moon put in with pai 'but' is hard to render in English with its paucity of synonyms for 'moonlight'.
8.1 ambara ...ambara: the first ambara means ambergris or 'grey amber', a costly substance with a sweet earthy odour used in perfumery (it is secreted from the intestines of the sperm whale and is found on the sea and seashore). The second amibara means 'clothing'.
8.1 atara: a variant reading preferred to antara.
8.2 deva änyo: the poet suggests himself as the logical subject of the verb here - cf. next note
10.3 deva cittacaii ke: 'appealing to Dev/to the gods' - the play on the poet's name cannot be accommodated by the translation.

12 Bright as gold they shine on her limbs, just as her youth glimmers like a jewel in gold brocade;
like galls from the tree of beauty, or balls for Kāmdev's [sport] her breasts shine, her face like the moon, of great splendour her gentle smile.
The excellence of her lustre, Dev, is better even than her adornments which look so well, and bees buzz all around her.
The brightness of her body is fourfold even that of her clothes, a hundred times her scent is the innate fragrance of her body.
13 When two periods of the daytime remained she was fitted with all her finery, and sat most illustrious, eager for the tryst.

14 Elegant, high-born, her body of most lovely hue, she speaks sweetly as though with the great poets' tongue; with her tilak as its decoration, her curls adorn the gateway of Kāmdev's capital, and her fish-shaped eyes are its banner.
With the nymphs Rambhā and Tilottamā and Sukeşī and Mañjughosāa, like Indra's queen, ever dwelling on Dev's heart; with all her finery, resplendent today the lion-waisted one is seated on the lion-throne like lion-mounted Bhavān̄̄.

15 At the time when sun and moon set and rise in West and East, the passionate lady went to the pleasure palace, well set for the tryst.
16 Her parting braided with pearls, her plaited hair like a snake on her chest, her breasts lofty, and her walking like an elephant's gait;
like Kämdev's lady, wearing a red sari, wanton and rapid the deer-movement of her two eyes.
From the river of silver of the lithe lady's limbs ripples of breeze arise, carrying the fragrance of her scent;
while with her friends, joyfully, the deer-eyed lady comes, in so many ways was the floor of the pleasure-palace coloured.
12.3 sobhā...nikā̄$\overline{h i} t e$ : i.e. the lustre of her body is superior to that of the jewellery which is supposed to beautify it, just as a glimmer [of water] shines through scum (kā̃) floating on its surface. Cf. 12.4. bhramara bhrame: a variant reading preferred to bhavara bhare.
14.2 torani...cilakati: the image has her brow as a palace doorway, decorated with a tilak (often used as a decorative symbol of auspiciousness), and further adorned by her hanging locks (alika). The conceit (whose wording is hardly straightforward) is developed further with her fish-shaped eyes representing Kämdev's banner, which bears a makara, a fabulous sea-beast symbolizing sensuality.
14.3 devapati rän̄ : 'queen of the lord of the gods', i.e. Indra's queen, the voluptuous Indrāni. The other allusions are to apsaras famed for their beauty - Rambhā, one of the treasures produced by the churning of the ocean; Tiiottamā, made by Brahmā from a particle (tila) of each of the best (uttama) substances of name 'heart-dweller' also signifies a jewel worn' Mane chest, and is involved in a pun here The allusions name heart-dweller' also signifies a jewel worn on the chest, and is involved in a pun here. The allusions these nymphs add more to the general panegyric tone of the verse than to its narrative.
matamga gati: 'elephant's gait', i.e. a gentle sensually rolling motion, with a swaying of the hips.

SPRING
1 Here she brings a flower in bloom, there she stirs the wind; here she spreads a moonlight quilt, the handmaid Spring, as she comes.
2 Whose delight does not grow endlessly in this spring season? Cuckoos sing in shrill tones, bumblebees hum like a lyre's string.
3 Having the elixir of the moon, and bringing lovely Spring, it is as though Kāmdev were become Dhanvantari to remove the world's ills.
4 The bee roams in the flowered groves and cool blows the breeze; whose heart would not yield on going to Yamuna's bank?
5 Bathing in a pool and wandering from grove to grove, slowly, slowly the breeze approaches, like a royal swan.
6 Knowing the trees of your garden to be lovelier than the tree of paradise, the ocean's waters come and pour forth - the fountains their excuse - to see them.

SUMMER

7 With the dazzling sunshine as servant, and whirling the wind as a noose, the thug of summer strikes full at noonday's height.
8 No water flows from these fountains, the water burns up and leaves the earth in finery: seeing the tyranny of the hot season it flees to the sun-king.
9 Some overflow with delight, some leap, some run and beat the water: seeing the grace of the women's water-games the lover is satiated, yet wanting more!
10 The lover splashes the women thus with his hands, taking delight in the water-games, as though from all around, the moon were raining pearls onto the lotus.
1.2 cädanī : 'moonlight' - but also 'white sheet, quilt' (with spring personified as a handmaiden).
$1.2 \bar{a} i$ : a convenient (though semantically redundant) rhyme: cf. 7.2, 8.1, 12.1, 16.2 .
2.1 tamita : the string of a musical instrument, or of Kāmdev's bee-strung bow.

3 Kāmdev is personified as Dhanvantari, the celestial physician who, with Spring as his nurse, and Kāmdev is personified as Dhanvantari, the celestial physician who, with Spring as equipped with the 'lord of elixirs' - the nectarous moon - will cure the ailing world.
6 In this conceit the ocean enters the garden fountains just in order to admire the springtime trees, Mughal and Raiput a ardens, and included elaborate ducts, waterfalls, fountains and so forth The sun is worse than a thag (cf. BS 3), because it attacks even in broad daylight.
8 Water, fleeing the iniquitous summer heat, burns in anger; decorating itself (an allusion to the shimmer of heatwaves?) it secks refuge with the sun (bhänu, both 'sun' and 'king'). ubharata: this variant reading is preferred to the text's ubhakata.
9 With a change of context from 8, this stanza describes the heroines' games in abundant water 10 The conceit hinges on kara, 'hand'/'moonbeam': the lover is like the moon; his hands are the moonbeams which make the women/lotuses blossom with delight as he splashes nectar onto them.

MONSOON

11 In the rains, know the world's pleasure to be greater than heaven's, in this season when the heavenly 'ladyfly' ever comes and roams the earth
12 Filled with flower fragrances, slow and gentle blows the wind; like an accomplished lover the monsoon wind enwraps the heart and steals the mind.
13 Red clothing adorning her body, the woman roams pleasurably as though a goddess had conquered the earth with a glance.
14 Swaying on the swing, the lady learns the skill of ascending the skies; soon she will come to the point of defeating the gods' womenfolk

AUTUMN

15 With the moon an umbrella over his head, and taking a lesson from Kāmdev, holding a lotus as his weapon, King Autumn has vanquished the earth.
16 With moon-bright face resplendent and wagtail eyes a-dancing this nymph of Autumn beguiles the wide world.
17 In the daytime an unparalleled pure lotus radiates in clear water, at night too, in rivalry, it charms the heart in a moon's form.

WINTER

18 Day takes the role of night, and the moon that of the sun, in the winter mist: cakoras have an illusion of union, cuckoos an illusion of separation.
19 For fear of the winter cold it cannot rise - finding the fire, the smoke remains spread low on the ground.
THE COOL SEASON
20 The leaves of each tree show it clearly in this winter season: may no-one be separated and suffer cold, their bodies shrivelling [thus]!
21 No-one's aloofness abides when the go-between has done her work: this cold cold wind of winter brings all together.
11.2 indrabadhū: alluding to the literal sense 'Indra's wife', the poet suggests that this monsoon visit shows the beauty of the earth in this season to be superior to that of heaven.
13.2 surì: both 'sun' (< sürya ) and, personified, 'goddess'. In the context of the first meaning, harī can be interpreted as 'green', descriptive of the earth's monsoon verdure.
14.1 jhüli jhūli : playing on a swing is a traditional monsoon pastime (with a genre of songs, hinḍolā).
15.1 chatra : the umbrella is a symbol of royalty, appropriate to 'Autumn' personified as a king.

17 The lotus and the moon are rivals for the same role, for which they both contend; the former is resplendent in the daytime, the latter in the night (when its reflection in the water imitates the lotus)
18 The winter mist makes day seem like night; thus cakoras (which live on moonlight) think they are The winter mist makes day seem like night; thus cakoras (which live on moonlight) think they are united, and cuckoos (habitually separated from their mates at night) believe themselves separated.
The smoke clings to the ground when the air is cold, as though staying near the fire for warmth.
19.1 The smoke clings to the ground when the air is cold, as though staying near the fire for warmuth.
20.2 The published reading bichurana ko has been adapted here, but the meaning is perhaps not fully clear 21.1 lyāi dūtikā ghāta: 'the go-between having brought about her stratagem', i.e. the contrivance of a meeting between lover and beloved. bāta has the additional sense 'dū̄tikả's words'.

1 Death walks with you, ever hovering over your head;
this body is so transitory, a tower of cloud
Do not therefore waste that breath so rare:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
2 A lifetime slips by in the entanglements of the world, calling out each and every hour on the gong.
Do not miss your chance uselessly, to repent later:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
3 Infatuation for son, friend, husband or wife is a source of great grief; why do you remain deceived, seeing the mirage of the world?
Do not tempt your mind with dreams of royal delights:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
4 Ward off disputation, mental fancy, and the anguish of desire; never contemplate malice or hostility to others.
Enrol not your mind in the world's school of illusion:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
5 [Those whose] souls are perverse and harsh, and filled with pride, the saintly do not reside with honour at their house.
Never even dream of consorting with them:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj
6 Nowhere is there ever repose, the world is a well of pain;
[yet] the company of god's votaries is ever blissful.
Spend your time with them, in a happy state:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
1.3 durlabha sã̃sa: the soul wandering in samsära attains human birth only with great difficulty, and hence this is seen as a valuable opportunity for true devotion to God.
suta mita pati tiya moha : i.e. all family and domestic relationships.
kalaha kalapanā käma kalesa : as so often with such phrases, the compounded nouns can be resolved in a number of different ways.
nivāranaũ/ bicāranaũ: examples of the didactic or dictatorial imperative mood so often associated with the infinitive in Braj and MSH
This line stands as a rel. clause, picked up by correlative tinake in the following line. A more elegan English translation would transpose the two phrases (cf. 7.1/2) sukha rūpa: as the final member of a compound, rüpa means 'having the appearance or nature of consisting of'. Thus 'comprised of bliss'.

7 Those whose limbs are brimful with adoration for Krṣna, the hue of supreme love glows in their eyes.
Through serving such saintly folk, tenfold devotion is achieved: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

8 Braj and Vrindaban are Syām's beloved domain;
there the trees are ever bent with the burden of fruits and flowers.
Roll with me there on the ground marked by the couple's feet:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
9 In Nandiśvar, Barsānā, and Gokul village, at the fluting-tree, and at Sanket, there roams the dark one.
Go to Govardhan, to Rādhākuṇ̣, to the sweet Yamuna: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

10 Nanda, Yaśodā, Kīrti and Vṛsabhānu - there is no other in the world greater than these.
Worship the dust of the feet of the cows, milkmaids, herdsmen and others: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

11 Defeated, dear Dāmodar was bound to a mortar;
he showed the universe in his mouth, and he liberated trees.
His wanton sports are many - how could one encompass them all? Sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

12 He abolished Indra's great feast, and angered him greatly; what can one say of that time when the rains of dissolution fell? Giridhar saved those who came to him for refuge: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
dasadhā: 'tenfold', glossed by Gupta (1975:169) as meaning 'navadhä bhakti (ninefold devotion) plus premā bhakti (loving devotion)'. 'Ninefold devotion' conventionally comprises the following: дādasevana (worship of the deity's feet), arcana (worshipful homage), vandanā (praise), säkhya (intimate friendship), dāsya (humble servilitude) and ātmanivedana (surrender of self).
8.1 bria : a common spelling in both early and modern texts for braja; here it suggests an assimilation to the following brmidāvana, whose $I$ is etymological
8.3 Ioti lutaiyai: 'roll on the ground [in ecstasy], and make me do so'
9. 1,2 nam̉dīsvara barasānau gokula ...samiketa: the names of villages in Braj. Nandišvar is an old name for Nandagãv or 'Nanda's village'; its meaning of 'Lord of Nandi' suggests that the place had associations win ser in bect important centre of the Vallabha sect, to which Nāgrīdās belonged. Sanket, 'the tryst' is a village near Barsān̄̄a associated with Krspa and Rādhā’s assiomations. See Entwistle 1988: chapter 8. village near Barsänā associated wiuh Kiṣ̣a and Radhā̀s assignauions. See Entwistle 1988. Chaper 8 . For episodes described in this and subsequent verses, see Index of Epithets and Motifs.

13 Syām, the heart's delight, dispatched to salvation
Pūtanā, the heron demon, and other malevolent demons.
He is guardian of the cattle-station and the cowherds, do not forget him: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

14 He cleansed the Yamuna of [Kāliya's] poison, and drank the forest fire; he overcame Nanda's dread, the serpent, and gave joy to all.
Set your heart on the banisher of the cowherds' pains:
sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
15 The cowherds' band - Syām is among them merrily they eat their workday food in the $d h a \bar{k} k$ tree's shade. Let the attention be filled with his charming ways and pranks: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

16 Wearing peacock feathers and a seed necklace, he smears his body with pigments, in cowherd's garb grazing the cows with Balrām near the village. Through contemplation of that dust-adorned face, find the highest joy: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

17 Gopāl obstructs the road on the pretext of a toll, bearing a staff; in deep forest and on dark common he has taken a woman. Entangle your mind in those entanglements of eyes, words and bodies; sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

18 He plunders butter and women's hearts, which they kept hidden; he stealthily steals their clothes while they worship the goddess. Look on this thief, and have your mind stolen by him: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
13.2 Even demons defeated by Krṣ̣a achieve salvation, through the mere fact of having come into contact Even demo with him.
14.1 davānala : on two separate occasions when the cowherds and cattle were threatened by forest fires, Krsna drank the flames (BhP X.17.20-25, X.19).
15.2 har at the end of the line is auxiliary to the ptc. jevata.
16.1 mora paccha dhara: 'with peacock feathers on his trunk'. In Rāsililā performances, Krsna performs a 'peacock dance', and wears appropriately elaborate costume. This description may have its origi here.
17.1 laỹ charī: 'having a staff [in his hand]' (MSH charī lekar). The staff is an emblem of rank in this dān-IIIāa context, wherein Krṣna takes on the guise of a tax official and extorts a toll from the gopis.
18.2 While they were bathing in the Yamuna in preparation for worship of the Goddess, Krṣna stole the gopis' clothes and climbed into a tree on the riverbank, insisting that each of them in turn must come forward in her nakedness (as the human soul must approach God) to retrieve them.

19 Hearing his flute, the woman of Braj have fallen into passion's grip; inanimate and animate change roles, celestial women are compelled. Remembering that intoxicating tune, let the intoxicant infuse your mind: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

20 On an autumn night he unfolded the rāsa dance and created joy; Siva lost his concentration and his mind began to roam. Remembering the frenzy of that blissful sentiment, delight your mind: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

21 Holding each other's arms they move in sweet steps; their jewelled crescent-shaped necklaces and their ear-rings tremble. The wonder of the gods at this sport - how could it be forgotten? Sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

22 The splendour of that Ocean of Qualities increased greatly with the musical airs, with sweet cries of 'thei! thei!' as a wanton eyebrow arched. Drench your soul in the spirit of that sport, the defeat of Kämdev: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

23 Drowning in perspiration from the dance, he plunges then into the Yamuna, playing like an elephant with his whole retinue of females.
Remembering the splendour of that splashing and sprinkling, be charmed: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.

24 For Rādhā's sake, the dark one leaves Braj not for a moment; the skilful one performs that eternal sport which pleases the mind. Taste with your tongue the blended glory of Braj and Rādhā: sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj

25 Hearing of the joyous sport of Braj never cloys; steep your soul in the holy company of the Braj devotees. May 'Nāgariyā' attain residence in Braj as the fruit of grace; sing night and day of Nanda's dear son, the skilful one of Braj.
19.2 Sura bāma: 'women of the gods', i.e. the gods' wives, or heavenly nymphs, Apsarases.
20.2 gata samādhi cala-citta: 'bereft of concentration, unsteady of mind'. Krṣna's disturbance of Siva reflects the myth in which Śiva's meditation was disturbed by Kāmdev, who sowed seeds of desire for Pārvat̄ in his mind.
22.2 thei-thei : a bol or rhythmic mnemonic called out by dancers, and on which is based improvization and counter-improvization by dancer and drummer. As is usually the case with this phrase, eevowels are to be scanned as short.
24.1 braja tajata nahí pala: Nāgaridās here follows that tradition in which Krṣna is seen as residing permanently in Vrindavan with Rādhā; the concept of Krṣna as an incarnation of Viṣnu with the purpose of going to Mathura to overcome Kansa is played down in favour of a concentration upon Krṣ̣a and Rādhă's 'etemal sport' (nitya vihāra - cf. 24.2).

1 Care is a flame, the body a forest which keeps catching fire; no smoke is seen openly, [but] the heart within is filled with fumes The heart within is filled with fumes, and burns like a glass-furnace; blood and flesh are burnt up, a frame of bones remains. Says Giridhar, prince of poets: hear me, o my friend how can those men live, whose bodies are pervaded by care?

2 Sir, no-one should ever dream of saying what is in his thoughts; it should be kept in the mind as long as a motive remains.
As long as a motive remains, never dream of speaking;
if a wicked person becomes heated, you yourself stay cool.
Says Giridhar, prince of poets: to the wise, actions speak for themselves, [so] do not you speak, sir.
3 Sir, snow fell on a town, coming from the skies;
leaving a blind man and a cripple, the townsfolk ran off.
The townsfolk ran off, and the blind man pondered a plan;
he took the cripple on his shoulder, and [relying on] his sight, set forth.
Says Giridhar, prince of poets: proceed in agreement, brother;
without agreement, Rāvaṇ lost his kingdom, sir.
4 In search of gold, her lover left, leaving homeland deserted;
neither gold was gained nor did the lover come home - silver became her hair.
Silver became her hair, all her beauty she wept away, sitting at home regretting 'My husband still hasn't returned'.
Says Giridhar, prince of poets: without savoury beauty, all is insipid; when youth declines, what is the use of gold?
$1.4 \quad$ gau $=$ gayau.
2.1 sä̈: Giridhar often uses this vocative to fulfil the requirement that the Kundaliyā stanza begin and end with same word - cf. verses 3 and 6 . It is perhaps surprising that the acknowledged master of this verse form should have recourse to such an ingenuous device; cf. Edward Lear's fondness for completing a limerick with a repeat or paraphrase of its own first line.
2.1,3 bhüla: the abs. (cf. MSH bhūlkar bhī), 'even by mistake'. Cf. AP 5.3.
2.4 hvai rahiyai : lit. 'be and remain'.
2.5-6 Syntax: karatūt̄̄.., bāta kahi deta.
3.3 eka matau: here 'an idea', rather than adj. 'of one mind, unanimous'.
4.5 launa bina : lit. 'without salt'. Underlying this phrase is the metaphorical sense of launa (and its Sk launa bina : lit. 'without salt'. Underlying this phrase is the metaphorical sense etymon lavana, and adj. derivates of both) as 'piquancy, beauty': cf. BS 51 etc.
4.6 Kahā lai kariyai sonā: the syntax is sonā lai kahā kariyai (for lai cf. MSH lekar in this usage).

मोती लेने पी गये खार समुन्दर तीर । मोती मिले न पी मिले नैननि टपकत नीर ॥ नैननि टपकत नीर पीर अब का सों कहियै । बीते बारह मास पिया बिन घर ही रहियै ॥ कह गिरधर कविराय सांझ डारत सगनौती । जर जाओ वह सिंधु जहां उपजत है मोती ॥ & ॥ साई एके गिरि धरयौ गिरिधर गिरिधर होय हनूमान बहु गिरि धरे गिरिधर कहै न कोय । गिरिधर कहै न कोय हनू दौलागिरि लायौ ता कौ किनका टूट परचौ सो कृष्ण उठायौ ॥ कह गिरधर कविराय बड़ेन की बड़ी बड़ाई थोड़े ही जस होय यसी पुरुषन कौं साई ॥ ६ ॥

पानी बाढ़चौ नाव में घर में बाढ़चौ दाम । दोऊ हाथ उलीचियै यही सयानौ काम ॥ यही सयानौ काम नाम ईश्वर कौ लीज पर-स्वारथ के काज सीस आगै धरि दीजै । कह गिरधर कविराय बड़ेन की यही है बानी चलियै चाल सुचाल राखियौ अपनौ पानी ॥७ ।

बिना बिचारै जो करै सो पाछैं पछिताय काम बिगारे आपनौ जग में होत हँसाय ॥ जग में होत हँसाय चित्त में चैन न पावै । खान पान सनमान राग रंग मनहि न आवै ॥ कह गिरधर कविराय दु:ख कछु टरत न टारे । खटकत है जिय माहिं कियौ जो बिना बिचारे ॥ $॥$

5 In search of pearls, her lover went to the shore of the salty sea; neither pearls nor her lover did she get, as tears dripped from her eyes. Tears dripped from her eyes -- whom could she tell now of her sorrow? Twelve months passed as she stayed at home without her dear one. Says Giridhar, prince of poets: in the evening she casts an omen; may that ocean burn up where are produced those pearls!

6 Sir, by holding just one mountain, Giridhar became 'the mountain-holder' Hanumān held many mountains, but no-one calls him 'mountain-holder'! No-one calls him 'mountain-holder', Hanū who brought the snowy mountain; a piece of it broke off and fell, which is what Krṣna lifted up. Says Giridhar, prince of poets: grand is the aggrandizement of grandees; small indeed is the glory of the glorified, sir.

7 If water gathers in the boat or money gathers in the home, bale it out with both hands - this is the wise course of action. This is the wise course of action: take the name of God, and for another's self-interest, lay your head before him. Says Giridhar, prince of poets, this is the nature of the great: proceed with proper propriety, and maintain your reputation.

8 He who acts without thinking, later feels remorse; he spoils his purpose and is ridiculed in the world. He is ridiculed in the world and knows no peace of mind; eating and drinking, honour, fun and frolic - nothing pleases. Says Giridhar, prince of poets, that grief is not avoided by evasion the deed done without thinking rankles in the heart.

9 He tied a hookah in his waist-band, taking its mouthpiece in his hand, and wended his way along the road, tobacco tied to his side. Tobacco tied to his side, he forgot the purpose of his journey; all cares went far away, his mind blossomed at the sight of fire. Says Giridhar, prince of poets: when came a note from Yama, Death took his life away - and in his hands remained his hookah.
saganautí : lit. 'good omen', but here evidently closer to 'curse'.
6.3 Hanumān's unrewarded mountain-holding was an episode in the Rāmāyana war: despatched to the Himalayas for herbs to cure the wounded, he brought the whole mountain on which they grew. bärhyau...bārhyau: perfective tense suggests resolution as a conditional clause.
7.6. $p \overline{\bar{n}} \overline{\tilde{z}}$ : the sense is distinct from that which started the stanza.
9.1 tamākū: 'tobacco' (cf. MSH tambākū). Giridhar's verse is amongst the first of its kind to show the first indications of the European presence in India, and this word (a loan from Portuguese, afte Spanish tabaco, ultimately from Haitian) is the only word in this reader to be borrowed from (or via) a European language.

10 At midnight he came to my house; say, who could describe his beauty?
On seeing him my mind was thrilled Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, the moon.

11 I procured him through a servant girl; I showed him all my naked limbs. With him I have enjoyed union Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, oil.

12 He who comes both night and day enters my house through my open door. Whom can I tell of the joy he gives me? Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, the wind.

13 The whole day long he's by my side, he says such sweet and lovely things. Dusky is his body and reddish his eyes Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my mynah.

14 To look at, he is knotty and stocky; to taste, very sweet!
Kiss him on the mouth, a jar of nectar -
Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, sugarcane.
15 Night and day he dwells on my breast, holding tight my two breasts.
Riding up and down he tosses and trembles. Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my bodice.

16 As for me, I prefer an elephant's: smaller or bigger just doesn't please I seek it out and make it all fit Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my bracelet.

17 His fresh colour pleases me greatly; without him the whole world seems dull. Mounting and dismounting he twists my limbs Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, bhang.

18 With great long strides he comes quenching his day-long appetite. When he gets up to leave I grab his knob Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my camel.

19 Small, stout, and very charming, anyone who sees him goes quite crazy Sometimes he's in, sometimes he's out Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my monkey.

20 He's a lovely colour, gaudy and gay, full of qualities, a brilliant fellow. He never sleeps without hymning Rām Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my parrot 21 Throbbing when mounting, losing his wits; he finds great pleasure in squeezing thighs. He's very strong, though tender of years Who, dear, your lover? No, dear, my horse.

dāsī de: 'giving [money] to the servant-girl'. Gilbertson notes the variant te for de $h \overline{\not o n} \bar{a} / r a s i \bar{l} \bar{a}:$ Khaṛī Bolī -ā endings in this stanza typify the mixed language of the Mukrī texts. hathin kau: 'an elephant's' - i.e. (in the more innocent meaning) the decorative metal band worn on elephant's tusk, or a bracelet made of ivory; alternatively, 'jumbo size'.
kheuta: i.e. (again, in the innocent meaning) the pommel of the camel's saddle. Gilbertson, taking the our sense as 'shoulder', does not include this verse in the group described as 'too suggestive of the vulgar to be translated into literal English' (though our verses 15 and 16 are so designated). chotā motā : these two adjectives here maintain their distinct senses, 'small and stout', as opposed to the idiomatic compounded sense of 'trifling, insignificant'.
jo dekhe : the object 'him', necessary in English, spoils the joke (read 'him/it').
Gilbertson translates 'He is sometimes inside (the house), sometimes outside', and annotates his parenthesis with 'There is also, of course, the other meaning'.
Gilbertson: "Natives often teach their parrots to say, "Ráma," "Shiva," etc. '.

The thumrī, usually classified musically as a 'light classical' song, is one of the most popular styles of Hindustani music. It is a love song, characterized by tender romanticism, and often describes the bittersweet emotion of virah, the pain of love in separation. Thumrīs are often in Braj, though the language may be mixed with Kharī Bolī or Avadhī. The same songs may be used for either thumri performance and for the more 'classical' style of $k h y$ āl, in which the development of the rāga is followed more strictly. In terms of metre and rhyme the texts are usually rather free; the examples below have a pāda length of approximately 18 mātrās.
लट उलझी सुलझा जा रे बालम,
हाथन मोरे मेहँदी लगी है ।
माथे की बिंदिया बिखर गई रे
अपने हाथ लगा जा, रे बालम ॥? ॥

1 Untangle my tangled locks, o beloved, for I have henna on my hands.
The dot on my forehead is disarranged;
put it right with your own hand, o beloved.

```
का करुँ सजनी, आए न बालम ।
तड़पत बीती मोरी उन बिन रतियाँ ॥
रोवत रोवत कल नाहीं आवे, तड़प तड़प मोहे कल न आवे । निस दिन मोहे बिरहा सताए, याद आवत जब उनकी बतियाँ ॥२ ॥
```

2 What can I do, friend, my beloved has not come; without him I spent the whole night writhing.
Weeping and weeping I find no rest, writhing and writhing no peace comes; night and day lovesickness torments me whenever I think of his words.

The version given here is based on L. Garg 1981:75 and P.Manuel 1989:12; a recent recording (as a khyāl in Behāg) is by Ustad Munawar Ali Khan in Homage to Bade Ghulam Ali Khan (Audiorec ACCD 1003-S).
1.2 The nāyikā has decorated her hands with patterms of henna, and uses this as an excuse to give her beloved an imperious command. The disarray of her hair and her bindī are of course the result of lovemaking, but in typical thumrī fashion this is alluded to only indirectly.
2 The text is from L. Garg 1981:74, and also appears in the recording noted above

Index of Epithets and Motifs

(This index is intended to clarify narrative and descriptive allusions not covered in the notes or the glossary, and to cross-reference certain terms such as patronymics. Entries follow English alphabet order. The spelling conventions used here are those followed in the translations. Epithets of Kṛ̣̣a are listed within the 'Krṣna' entry.)

Ajämil: a Brahmin of Kanauj, who married a prostitute and lived a sinful life. On his deathbed he called out to his youngest son, named 'Nārāyan': and by unwittingly taking this name of Viṣnu, he was saved. See BhP. VI.1.26-68. was his Arjun: third and most heroic of the five Pāṇ̣u princes; Krṣna /charioteer in the Mahābhārata war, and his interlocutor in the Bhagavad Gītā.
Baka: the demonic brother of Pūtanā (q.v.); he tried to avenge her defeat by assuming the form of a giant stork and taking Kṛṣna in his beak, but Krṣna escaped by making his own body unbearably hot, and then tearing Baka in half. See BhP. X.11.47-53.
Baldev: son of Nanda and Rohinī, and half-brother of Kṛṣna.
Bali: a Daitya (demon) king who won control over the three worlds. Viṣnu appeared before him in the form of a dwarf (Skt vämana, Braj bāvana) and asked for as much land as he could cover in three strides; when the trifling request was granted, Viṣnu assumed his universal form, and measured out the three worlds with his three steps, thus vanquishing Bali (who was allowed sovereignty of Pātāl, the infernal regions)
Balrām: a name of Baldev.
Bhavānī: a name of Pārvatī, wife of Siva; her vehicle is the tiger (or lion).
Brhaspati: priest of the gods, later known as the deity of wisdom and eloquence.
Crane demon: see Baka.
Dasrath: king of Ayodhyā, descendant of Raghu and father of the four princes Rāma, Bharat, Lakṣman and Satrughna. He granted two boons to Bharat's mother Kaikeyī after being tended by her after a battle: she used them to promote Bharat as heir to the throne and to have Räma exiled - events which set in motion the Ramayana narrative.
Draupadī: wife of the five Pāṇ̣av brothers. The eldest of the five, Yudhiśthir, lost Draupadi together with all his possessions in a gambling match played against his cousins, the Kauravas. Duryodhan, the Kaurava prince, tried to dishonour her by stripping her of her clothing, but Viṣnu miraculously lengthened her sari into an endless piece of cloth.
Elephant: the 'Gaj-rāj' or 'Gajendra', a 'royal elephant', saved by Viṣnu on uttering the name 'Nārāyan' when attacked by a crocodile. Like that of Ajāmil, the myth symbolizes the redemptive power of the divine name. See BhP. VIII.2.27-33 and VIII. 3.

Ganes: the elephant-headed son of Siva and Pārvatī. He is the god of wisdom, and the scribe of the gods, who transcribed the Mahābhārata from the dictation of Vyāsa. As 'lord of obstacles' (Vighna-haran etc.) he is invoked at the beginning of any new undertaking. His names Ganes and Ganapati derive from his position as lord of the ganas, minor deities who wait on Siva.
Gautam's wife: Ahalyā, wife of the sage Gautam, turned to stone by her husband after being seduced by Indra. She was restored to her human state by the touch of Rāma.
Girijā: 'daughter of the mountain', a patronymic of (synonymous) Pārvatī, born of the Himalaya mountain (giri, parvata). In RB her husband Siva is called 'Girijā-ī'.
Gusāī (Skt gosvāmī): 'master of sense faculties/master of cows', a religious title applied to Vallabha in VV, and also adopted as a hereditary title by his descendants and the dynastic priests of parallel Vaiṣnava sampradāys. The term is also applied to God (SS 5.1 etc ).

Haldhar: 'plough-holder', an epithet of Kṛṣa's half-brother Baldev, who carries (or rather is armed with) a ploughshare.
Hanumān: the monkey god, son of the wind, faithful servant of Rāma - and hence the ideal model of the 'servile' (dāsya ) devotional attitude. When he was captured by Rāvan's forces his tail was set on fire: but he put this to his advantage, ran amok, and burned down the city of Lanka. Flying through the air, he brought from the Himalaya a mountain on which grew herbs to restore those wounded in the battle with Rāvan. He is referred to by various patronymics such as Mārutsut, Suvansamīr (from māruta, samira, 'wind').
Harlot: see Pingalā
Hiraṇyakasipu: father of Prahlād, q.v.
Indra: lord of the gods in the Vedic pantheon, but reduced to a lower status in later Hinduism. As lord of the skies he has the rainclouds at his command. The Govardhan myth (q.v. under 'Kṛṣna' below), in which Indra is humbled by Kṛ̣̣na, illustrates this change of status vis-à-vis Krṣna/Viṣṇu.
Indrāni: the wife of Indra.
Janak: king of Videha and father of Sītā, who is given the patronymic 'Jānakī' Jasumati (Skt yaśumati), Jasodā: see Yaśodā.
Jaṭāyu: king of vultures, son of Viṣṇu's vehicle Garuḍa. Jatāyu was an ally of Rāma in the Rāmāyana war, and fought to defend Sītā from Rāvaṇ; mortally wounded, he achieved salvation through Rāma's intercession.
Kālindī: a patronymic of Yamuna as 'daughter of the sun' (Kalinda).
Kāliya: a five- (or multi-) headed venomous serpent which inhabited a pool in the Yamuna, polluting the water and terrorizing the district. The child Krṣna jumped fearlessly into Kāliya's coils and vanquished him in a fierce struggle, to emerge dancing triumphantly on the serpent's heads. At the intercession of Kāliya's wives, Krṣna spared him but banished him to the ocean. See BhP. X.16; and cf. the Srikrsṣakirtana version (M.H. Klaiman 1984:189-195).
Kāmdev: god of love; love and desire personified, and the epitome of physical beauty. The Indian Cupid, he bears a bow of sugarcane strung with humming bees and armed with blossom-arrows; Vasant (Spring) is his companion-cum-general. His symbol is the makar, a mythological fish or crocodile. He is also called Ananga, 'bodiless', from the occasion when he disturbed Siva's meditation with thoughts of lust for Pārvatī, at which Siva opened his third eye and burned him to ashes; Kämdev's wife Rati ('lust') begged Siva to resuscitate him, which he did - but without restoring his physical form. Amongst his other names are Ratipati and Madan.
Krṣna: 'the dark/black one', son of Vasudev and Devakī and adoptive son of Nanda and Yasodā. He is more frequently referred to in devotional texts by patronymics, by pet names indicating endearment, or by epithets implying identity with Viṣnu: the name 'Krṣna' itself is generally restricted to formulaic or technical uses (such as krṣnabhakti, AP 7.1). The following names and epithets of Kṛ̣na appear in this book:

Balbīr: 'mighty hero';
Brajnāgar: 'skilful one of Braj';
Brajrājkumār: 'prince of Braj';
Dāmodar: 'having a string round the belly'. Yaśodā, tiring of Krṣna's pranks, one day tied him by the waist to a heavy mortar: but Krishna dragged the mortar along, demolishing two trees and thereby releasing two Gandharvas who had been reduced to this form by a curse. (This episode is used to explain the epithet as deriving from Skt däma 'string' + udara 'waist'.) In vernacular treatments of the theme, the incident forms the basis of the gopis' complaint at Yaśodā's mistreatment of her child. See BhP. X.9-10. In a related incident, Yasodā rebuked Krṣna for eating earth: when she made him 'open wide' to show what he was eating, she had a temporary vision of the entire cosmos inside Krṣna's mouth; see BhP. X.8.32-45
Ghanśyām: 'dark blue-black, cloud-dark';
Giridhar, Giridhārī: 'mountain-holder' - see Govardhandhar;
Gopāl: 'cowherd';
Govardhandhar, ${ }^{\circ}$ nāth: 'holder/Lord of Govardhan'. In the famous Puranic episode, Krssna persuaded the people of Braj to abandon their traditional annual tribute to Indra, lord of the heavens and of the rain-giving clouds, and to make offerings instead to Govardhan hill, while at the same time honouring their cattle. Krṣna then assumed the identity of the hill itself, appeared seated on its peak, and conferred his protection upon the Braj cowherds. When the incensed Indra attempted to wash away the whole of Braj with storm and flood, Kさ̣ṣna lifted Govardhan as a protective umbrella, humiliating Indra. See BhP. X.24-25.
Govind: a name of Viṣnu/Kṛ̣̣na;
Hari: a name of Viṣnu/Krṣna;
Jadurai (Skt yadu, + rāi< rājan-): lord of the lunar Yādav dynasty (descended from Yadu);
Kānha, Kānho, Kānhar, Kanhāī: derivatives of the name 'Kṛ̣ṇa';
Lāl: 'dear one, darling son' (often suffixed to other names, e.g. Mohanlāl);
Mādhav: 'descendant of Madhu', a figure in the Raghu dynasty;
Manmohan: 'heart's delight';
Manohar: 'charming' (may often be interpreted as adjective rather than epithet);
Muralīdhar: 'flute-holder';
['Krṣna' continued:]
Murāri: Viṣṇu/Kṛṣna as 'enemy of Mura' - a demon who, along with his seven thousand sons, was slain by Krṣna;
Mohan: 'enchanter';
Nanda-kiśor, ${ }^{\circ}$-nandan, ${ }^{\circ}$-lāl: 'son of Nanda';
Nārāyaṇ: a name of Viṣnu/Krṣṇ;
Rādhāvallabh: 'lover of Rādhā', especially in the svarūp of that name worshipped by Hit Harivams (1502-1552) and his followers;
Raskhāni, ${ }^{\circ}$ na: 'mine of amorous sentiment' (and also name of a poet);
Sã̃varau (Skt syāmala-): 'dark one, dusky one';
Srīnāth: the svarūp of Kṛṣna worshipped by Vallabha, and principal deity of the Vallabha sect. In 1669, Srīnāth was taken from the temple at Govardhan to escape the iconoclasm of Aurangzeb, and was eventually established in a new temple in Rajasthan; the temple formed the nucleus of the town of Nathdwara. (The name 'Srīnāth', though existing independently as an epithet of Viṣnu as 'lord of Sri/Lakșmi', is popularly regarded as a contraction of 'S'rīgovardhannāth'.)
Syām: 'the dark one';
Tribhañgīlal: 'having three curves' - Krsṣna in his jaunty fluting pose, with bends at the knee, waist and neck.
Kuver: 'the ugly one', god of wealth and master of the obscure 'nine treasures', and chief of the Yakșas.
Lakṣman: younger brother and staunch companion of Rāma; he is depicted as a bowman.
Lalitā: foremost of the eight sakhis of Rādhā, the eight often being referred to en masse by the formula lalitādi, 'Lalitā and the others'.
Madan: 'the intoxicating one', Kāmdev.
Mahes: 'great god', Siva. He broke the fall of the Ganges, when it fell from heaven to earth, by catching it in his matted locks. Amongst his numerous epithets are Girijā-īsa 'Lord of Pärvati', and Trilocana 'Three-eyed'.
Nanda: husband of Yasodā and of Rohinī, and foster-father of Kṛnna. The name is the base for various patronymics applied to Krṣna: Nandanandan, Nandalāl, etc. Nanda was on one occasion rescued by his adoptive son: he was set upon by a serpent which nobody could drive off, but Krṣna approached and touched the serpent with his foot, at which it turned into the musician Sudarśan, cursed to have the form of a snake until such time as he should receive K!ṣna's touch. See BhP. X.34.1-18.
Nandarānī: 'Nanda's queen', a name of Yaśodā.
Narahari: the avatar of Viṣṇu as 'man-lion' - see Prahlād.
Pingalā: a prostitute who, despite her profession, was the recipient of Viṣnu's grace because of her piety. See BhP. XI.8.22-44.
Prahlād: a staunch devotee of Viṣnu, persecuted by his demonic father Hiranyakasipu (who is portrayed as a Saiva in some versions of this well-known myth). Hiranyakasipu was protected by a boon of safety, granted by the gods, which ensured that he could not be killed by man or beast, by hands or weapons, by day or by night, inside or outside the house, etc. etc. - the details of the boon are elaborated variously, at great length in some versions of the myth. Secure in this apparently watertight guarantee, he persecuted his Vaiṣnava son Prahlād, who nevertheless insisted on worshipping Viṣnuu. Hiraṇyakaśipu mocked Prahlād's claim that Viṣnu was omnipresent, at which Viṣnu manifested himself out of a pillar and appeared in the form of a man-lion (neither man nor beast), seized Hiranyakasipu and sat on the threshold (neither inside nor out) and disembowelled him with his claws (neither hands nor weapons), the time being dusk (neither daytime nor night), thereby circumventing all the conditions of the boon Prahlād is the archetypal devotee and recipient of Viṣnu's grace. See BhP. VII.5-8.
Purandar: 'city-destroyer', an epithet of Indra.
Pūtanā: among the demons who tried to overcome Kṛṣna was Pūtanā, also called Bakī 'brother of Baka' (q.v.). She was a giant demoness who assumed the form of a beautiful woman and attempted to kill Krṣna by suckling him from poisoned nipples, but was herself killed when he sucked the life out of her. See BhP. X.6.2-18.
Rādhā, Rādhikā: a gopi, daughter of Vrṣabhānu and lover of Krṣṇa; she becomes his consort in the later tradition. She is often referred to by such patronymics as 'Vrṣabhānukiśorī', and also as 'Syāmā’ (in the sense 'Syām's beloved').
Raghu: hero of the solar dynasty, and ancestor of Rāma (who is thus designated by the patronymic 'Rāghav' and the titles 'Raghubir' and 'Raghupati' - 'hero/lord of the Raghus').
Rāsa: the climax of Kṛ̣ña's Īlās is the great rāsa dance, performed under the autumn moon on the Yamuna's bank; Krṣna's fluting is an irresistable summons for the gopis, who join him in the dance which entrances the whole of creation. The rāsa is described in five chapters (the so-called rāsapañcādhyāyı̄̀) of the BhP. (X.29-33); cf. the Braj version of Nanddās (R.S.McGregor 1973).
Rāvaṇ: the demonic king of Lanka, 'villain' of the Rāmāyana story, who abducted Sītā and was later vanquished by Rāma.
Ravinanda: see Yama.
Rukminì: the queen of Krṣna during his reign as king of Dwarka.
Serpent: see Nanda; and see Kāliya.
Sītā: the daughter of Janak and wife of Rāma. Her name means 'furrow': in the Rāmāyana she sprang from the furrow being ploughed by Janak, who reared her as his adoptive daughter.

Siva: see Mahes.

Syāmā: 'beloved/consort of Syām', an epithet of Rādhā - though in non-Krṣnaite contexts the name means 'the dark one' and designates Kālī.
Trilocan: see Maheś.
Uddhav: a companion of Kṛṣna who attempts (unsuccessfully) to persuade the gopis to a realization of Krṣna as the abstract nirgun godhead. The confrontation between Uddhav and the lovelorn gopis allows an airing of the sagun/nirgun dichotomy; for the bhakti poets, however, the triumph of the gopis' point of view is a foregone conclusion, and Uddhav is little more than a stooge for their sagun devotional rhetoric.

The gopis identify Uddhav - and his bumbling arguments - with a black bee which flies past as they speak: hence the genre of 'bee songs' (bhramar-git) which treats of this theme. See BhP. X.46-47; and cf. the Braj version of Nanddās (R.S. McGregor 1973).

Vulture: see Jaṭāyu.

Yama: king of the dead (whom he snares with a noose), son of the sun, and twin of the goddess Yamunā. The patronymic Ravinanda is applied to him; and from his capacity as judge of the dead he is called Dharmarāj.
Yamuna: the river Jumna; sister of Yama and daughter of the sun; she is often designated by patronymics such as Kālindī, Kalindanandinī, Taranijā, etc. Her waters are characteristically dark, or dark blue, in contradistinction to the fair or white waters of the Ganges.
Yasodā: wife of Nanda and foster-mother of Krsna; also called Jasumati (Yasumati). The name is the base for the metronymic 'Yaśodānandan'.

Glossary

Most headwords fall into one of three categories: tatsama words, marked ' $[\mathrm{S}]$ '; semi tatsamas, for which tatsama spellings are indicated thus-‘अपजस...[S apayasas ]'; tadbhavas, where a numerical reference indicates a CDIAL headword (e.g. 'बावरो...[11504 vātula-]'. Where there is no CDIAL entry, ' $S$ ' precedes a suggested etymology Etymologies relate to headwords only, and not necessarily to other forms within the entry.

The following conventions have been followed in the glossary:
(i) Verbs are listed as roots with a short dash (e.g. कर-, जा- ); they are preceded in alphabetical order by any homonyms (thus कर m. 'hand' precedes कर- v.t. 'to do').
(ii) When no direct sg. form of a noun or adj. occurs in the text, its stem form is given with a long dash, followed by occurring forms in parenthesis, e.g. डोर- (डोरें)
(iii) Anusvār and candrabindu are not distinguished etymologically or metrically but follow textual usage. When both graphs appear in the texts (as in अंग and شँग ), the former only is listed.
(iv) When both tatsama and semi-tatsama forms of a word occur in the texts, the former is normally listed first, even though this may not be the usual vernacular form: ‘कारण, ${ }^{\circ} न$ '. Tadbhavas are listed separately as headwords in their own right.
(v) Cross-referenced words within an entry appear in Nagari.
(vi) Compound ppn. are listed under their second element.
(vii) Uncertain genders are bracketed: '(m.)', '(f.)'.

The following studies comprise or include etymological glossaries which have been referred to in compiling this glossary: A.W.Entwistle 1983; R.Mathur 1974; R.S McGregor 1968; C.Shackle 1981 and 1984; J.D.Smith 1976; M.Thiel-Horstmann 1983.

[^1]:    hutau etc. also occur alongside hatau.

[^2]:    ${ }^{1}$ chorii āyau: 'left and came', i.e. 'went and left'. Cf. 4 khāya khāya āvai, 24 māri āũu etc.
    ${ }^{2}$ gadahī jãni: 'thinking [the watchman] a she-ass' - a typical use of jãn- with the sense 'assume wrongly, misconstrue'. But cf. janyau as 'realized' in the next sentence.
    ${ }^{3}$ lauthiyana lauthiyana : 'with repeated blows of a stick'.
    ${ }^{4}$ tăte haũ kahatu hau: 'therefore I say' - a formula which typically introduces the moral at the end of the tale.
    ${ }^{5}$ kālabasa: 'in the grip of fate', i.e. 'as fate would have it'.

[^3]:    ${ }^{6}$ pramāna : used adverbially after a ptc., this has the sense 'immediately on' (but only in RN).
    ${ }^{7}$ so: 'that [fact]', referring back to the statement of the previous sentence.
    8 mare manusa: 'dead man', the ptc. qualifies the noun.
    ${ }^{9}$ māre bhaya ke: 'because of fear, through fear' - an inverted ppn.
    ${ }^{10}$ mamidira: 'house', not the sense 'temple' as in the modern language.
    ${ }^{11}$ khaibe : a contraction of khāibe, obl. inf.
    12 bana kī gaila gahī: 'took the forest path', i.e. 'set off for the forest'. Cf. 30 āpanĭ gaila gahī, 55 āpanau pantha liyau 'went on his/her way'.
    ${ }^{13}$ eka ûce para: 'on a high [place]'.
    14 yā né: the pr. refers to the kutani.
    ${ }^{15}$ mahārāja: the storyteller addresses his patron, the king Amarasakti.

[^4]:    16 kahyau hai : 'it is said [that]...'.
    17 bareni: obl. pl. of barau. The adj. is used nominally: 'small enemies do not die at the hands of big ones'.
    18 yäke samāna kau koū lyāū: 'if I could gct someone similar [in size] to him'.
    ${ }^{19}$ kiteka dina pāchai : 'after a certain time'.
    ${ }^{20}$ bokarā laina kau āpasa me matau kiyau: 'conspired together to get the goat'.
    ${ }^{21}$ Following the fondness of the Skt original for multiple synonyms, each of the three rogues is given a distinct vocabulary for the three key items in the story: brähmana / devatā / bipra for 'brahmin', kūkara/ svāna / kükarā for 'dog', and māthau / müra/sira for 'hcad'.

[^5]:    22 'What is this absurdity that you have done, puting a dog on your head!'
    ${ }^{23}$ sādha hū kī buddhi calai : 'even a good man loses his wits' (sādha here does not have the technical sense 'holy man' which applies in line 47).
    ${ }^{24}$ tăhi gẫva gayau jāni: 'thinking him gone to the village'.
    25 mere bhāyé : 'in my view, according to my feclings'.
    ${ }^{26}$ jau terau vā sõ aisau hī sancha ho: 'if your love for him is such'.
    ${ }^{27}$ svāmī strī kaũ cāhai kai na cāhai : 'whether a husband loves his wife or not'.
    28 bhartārra kī māra gāri simgāra jānai : ‘should consider her husband's beatings and abuse as ornaments'.
    ${ }^{29}$ pāna phūla ke samāna cka gharī kau pāhunau : 'like pān or a flower, an hour's guest' - a fleeting pleasure.

[^6]:    ${ }^{43}$ koṭavāra hamäre ghara té kyaũ risāyagau: future tense shows the question to be rhetorical, 'Why would the kotwal be angry with our household?'
    44 jita tere síga samāya : lit. 'wherever your horns may fit', i.e. 'anywhere you can find refuge'.
    ${ }^{45}$ See II.2.1 for a description of the dohā form. The couplet may be translated:
    In appetite, double the menfolk, in cleverness fourfold;
    in lust, eight-, and in courage, six- : woman are thus, all told.

[^7]:    tãnasena : Tānsen, Akbar's principal musician and one of the 'nine jewels' of the Mughal court. A composer of dhrupad compositions, he is said to have been the disciple of Svāmī Haridās of Vrindaban.
    2 aise laksanabāre bhaktana: 'devotees of such qualities'.
    ${ }^{3}$ kahā kahiyai: 'what could be said?', i.e. rhetorically 'how fine that would be!'.
    ${ }^{4}$ tānasena né kahī: f. agreement is with bāta (understood); cf. 6 desādhipati ke mana mé ã̄, 10 taba sunī, etc.
    ${ }^{5} j 0$ : most occurrences of $j 0$ in this text are as cj., typically after verbs of saying (cf. MSH ki).
    ${ }^{6}$ jinané yaha kïrtana kiyau hai: kar- in the sense 'to make, create' has largely been replaced by banā- (or more specific verbs according to context) in the modern language (though MSH does retain kavitä karnă) Cf. 115 sämagri karata hatí 'was preparing the food'.
    ${ }^{7}$ srïmathuräjī: the status of sacred towns calls for honorifics on the human model.
    ${ }^{8}$ srīnāthajī dvāra: dvāra here stands for 'the house of', i.e. the Srīnāthjī temple at Govardhan: cf. the later designation of the Rajasthan town Nathdwara ( $n a \bar{t} t h d v a \bar{r} r a \bar{a}$ ), which grew up around the temple of Srināthjī after the image was removed from Braj in Aurangzeb's reign.
    ${ }^{9}$ unakau: this is genitive (cf. MSH unkā ).

[^8]:    10 'Oh my mind, have love for Mādhav; abandon thou lust, anger, intoxication, greed and infatuation, for all are contrary.' This is the opening of a long stanza of 26 couplets on the vinay theme. Its list of human weaknesses is conventional: cf. MP 14.3. (A section of Bhāv-prakās commentary has been excised here.)
    11 jo bhagavāna ke āsraya hoyagau: 'if he is in the refuge of the Lord'.
    ${ }^{12}$ srī bhagavāna: a rather vague epihet, appropriate to Akbar's diplomatically ecumenical attitude.
    ${ }^{13}$ dravyādika: (dravya + ādika), 'money and so forth'.
    14 This allegorical narrative with the formula 'reluctant prodigy performs for celebrated patron' has parallels in e.g. the encounters between Svāmī Haridās and Akbar (P.D.Mital 1968:445), between the Lucknow musician Haideri Khan and Ghazi-ud-din Haider (J. Kippen 1988:19), and between the nineteenthcentury singer Inayat Hussein Khan and the Sufi saint Kahlil Mian of Sitapur (Peter Manuel 1989:20n).
    15 'There is no room left in my heart': for translation of this stanza (with slightly variant text) see SS 38. In typical fashion, the värtā has here appropriated a standard piece of devotional rhetoric to its own narrative purpose, making the stanza appear to be directed specifically at Akbar. Cf. a parallel example in the värtā of Krṣnadās, where a reference within a devotional poem becomes part and parcel of the vārtā narrative.

[^9]:    24 gopāla : the fact that Sūr's servant shares a name with Krṣna is essential to the story.
    25 mahāprasāda: food which has been consecrated by being placed before the deity. In a temple community, all food would be consecrated in this way.
    ${ }^{26}$ dekhana lăge : Hindi shares with English the extended sense of 'to look for, search for' - ironic here, in the context of Sūr's blindness.
    ${ }^{27}$ srināāthajī: the deity himself, who commonly takes a part in the action of the värtā stories.
    28 jhārī: the golden pitcher used in temple sevā, as opposed to Sūr's humble waterpot (lotăa).
    ${ }^{29}$ nätara: 'otherwise' (cf. MSH nahì to), rather than 'dry' (Pers. nā-tar).
    30 mã̛n jānyau: jän- here has the sense of 'to assume, think (wrongly)'.
    31 mamidira vārau gopāla hoyagau: 'it must be the temple Gopāl' - i.e. Śrīnāthjī.

[^10]:    ${ }^{32}$ tahã āyakai dekhai to saune kī jhārī hai : ... 3 narrative slips into historic present tense for this sentence.
    ${ }^{33}$ sriṭhākuraji: thākura is a name used for a temple dcity — here, Śrināthjī.
    34 srï gusä̈ $j \bar{i}$ : the title given in this text to Vallabha's son Viṭhalnāth.
    ${ }^{35}$ snāna karikai : a ritual bath is essential before handling the sacred temple pitcher.
    ${ }^{36}$ Here Viṭhalnāth addresses ‘Govardhandhar' - an epithet of Krṣna as 'Mountain-holder'.
    37 utthāpana ke kivāra khole: '[Viṭhalnāth] opened the doors for the utthāpan darsan'. In Vallabhite temples the daily worship is divided into eight successive ritual periods (ast!ayām), in each of which the doors may be opened for the devotees to take darsan of the deity after he has received food offerings etc. See Ambalal 1987:21-25; and for a modem account of darsan in the Srināthjī temple see A.-M.Gaston 1991.
    38 mo sarikhe patitana $k \delta$ : ‘sinners like me’.

[^11]:    64 yā pada ko gāna karata hī: pada is here 'line, tuk' rather than 'stanza, poem'.
    65 so divya deha hoya līlā me prāpta bhaī: 'became a divine body and was admitted to the eternal sport', i.e returned to the transcendental state it had held before its present incarnation.
    ${ }^{66}$ hama yās $\delta$ kamãya khāle : 'we earn our daily bread through her'.
    ${ }^{67}$ bhaī so bhaī, jo yākī itanī ārabala hatī: 'what's happened has happencd, this much was her allotted lifespan'. (The f. subject of bhaī is the implicit bāta.)
    ${ }^{68}$ A lengthy paragraph of $B h a ̄ v-p r a k a ̄ s$ commentary, discussing sectarian initiation, has been excised here
    ${ }^{69}$ rasakhāna $k i ̄ j a \bar{t} t i$ ke jo hate : 'those who were of Raskhān's community', i.e. the Muslims.
    ${ }^{70} \mathrm{~h} \delta$ jaiso hũ aiso haũ : ‘I am as I am'.
    ${ }^{71} \bar{a} s a k t i ~ h \delta \bar{i} i t o ~ a i s i ̄ ~ h \delta \tilde{i}: ~ ' i f ~ o n e ~ i s ~ t o ~ h a v e ~ a t t a c h m e n t, ~ t h e n ~ i t ~ s h o u l d ~ b e ~ o f ~ t h i s ~ k i n d ' . ~$

[^12]:    72 kahā cahie: 'what [more] could be desired?’.
    73 unmatta so : 'as if intoxicated', i.e. in a swoon-like state.
    74 tero kāma hõi jāya: 'your purpose would be achieved, you would win through'.
    ${ }^{75}$ mar to kachū jānata nāhít: the vārtā consistently emphasizes and lampoons Raskhān's ignorance and boorishness, even when relating his conversion.
    76 yaha sagarau...kaise jānõ: a clcar example of the way in which a protagonist in the vārtā is typically given the rôle of 'straight man' to the didactic purpose of the text. Thus the theological question 'If God is omnipresent, how is he to be recognized?' is set up in order to be answered 'In the form of Srinäthjī'.
    77 tämè mukuta kāchanī kau simgāra hato: 'He [K̦̦̣ṇa in the portrait] was adorned in crown and loin-cloth' (i.e. he was substantially unclothed, as would be usual in the summer strigār).
     end it leads the soul towards the Lord'.
    ${ }^{79}$ mahabūba : Raskhăn's Islamic background determines his choice of such nomenclature, incongruous in this Hindu setting. The 'Vaiṣnava' takes it up sarcastically in the following sentence.

[^13]:    karata cabäina käma : ‘do the work of backbiters’.
    narakapati : an epithet usually taken to refer to Yama (Yamrāj).
    dïnhe rahata kivāra: 'remains with door closed'.
    bandïjana : - jana is a pluralizing suffix (cf. MSH $\log$ ); the bandi are a caste of bards who extol the king and his army in battle -cf. 7.7 māgadha, another caste of bards.
    bäjā: a rhyme-form for băjai.
    desa 'ru: avagraha (s) indicates elision of initial a- after final -a of desa. Cf. 30.2 dharama 'ru dhira. kumati dïbe kaũ : 'for the giving of perversity' diga bijayì : 'conquering [countries in all] directions'.
